And be it further enacted, that no person to whom any land shall have been granted or conveyed in exchange according to the provisions of this act, shall at any time thereafter be evicted from the peaceable and quiet possession of such land by reason or in consequence of any person claiming right thereto through any title prior to that of, or through any defect of title in, the person by whom such land may have been granted or conveyed; but nevertheless it shall be lawful for the person claiming such right, and he is hereby authorized and empowered, to use, exercise, and enjoy all such and the same powers and remedies in trying his right to and in obtaining and recovering possession of the land which shall have been granted or conveyed in exchange as the person so claiming would in case this act had not been made have been enabled to use, exercise, or enjoy in trying the right to and recovering the possession of the land in exchange for which the same shall have been so granted or conveyed under the authority of this act.

"The question is, whether this proviso extends to the former statute and judgments on demurrer, or is limited to cases of verdict for the plaintiff. What is there so to limit it? The terms of the proviso are sufficiently large to comprehend judgment on demurrer, and no reason can be assigned for the restriction proposed: it is as just that the bishop should receive the protection of the court on demurrer as on verdict; and if so, why should not the clause be interpreted as in other cases, where there are several statutes in pari materia?"

"Then, as to the question whether the bishop had probable cause for defending the action, in a case which we took time to consider, it might be permitted to the bishop to doubt."

The following remarks have been extracted from the First Report of the Real Property Commissioners, p. 53 (May 11, 1829):

"We have next to mention a species of real property of great importance, as to which there is at present no limitation. The possessory action of quare impedit, by which the right to an advowson is usually tried, may be brought upon any presentation however remote. Thus, the title to an advowson may be questioned after a family has been for centuries in the undisturbed possession of it; and, upon the sale of an advowson, or of a best presentation, great trouble and expense are generally incurred in making out a title to the satisfaction of the purchaser. There must be some difficulty in framing a limitation for a species of property of so peculiar a nature. Mere length of time would not satisfy justice, unless the period were much beyond the usual bounds of living memory, because an opportunity of contesting the right may not occur more than once in a century. Lord Coke states an instance of a living of his own, in which a person had been incumbent above fifty years; and instances might easily be mentioned, in which two successive incumbents had continued for upwards of a hundred years. But adopting the suggestion of Mr. Justice Blackstone, whose high authority we are glad to have for this, as well as for some other amendments of the law which we propose, we think a limitation may be safely framed, compounded of length of time and number of avoidances, or rather of presentations, or opportunities to present by the patron. We conceive that, (counting from the time when the title to an advowson has accrued in possession,) as soon as sixty years have elapsed, and there have been three presentations, with institution and induction thereupon by a person claiming adversely to be patron, the right should be barred. The length of the period is required to guard against collusive avoidances and presentations; and it seems sufficient for this purpose. Presentations by the crown, on the promotion of the incumbent to a bishopric, of course will not be reckoned; but a presentation by lapse, we think ought, as an opportunity then existed of asserting the right. It seems unnecessary to clog the limitation with disabilities which have generally not been allowed where the period exceeded twenty years; but, as against a remainder-man, after any estate less than an estate tail, the period of sixty years must be reckoned from the remainder-man coming into possession on the determination of the particular estate. It has been suggested that the period should be extended to one hundred years; and that the adverse possession should be a bar to all the world. It seems, however, more in analogy to the general principles of the law of England to give effect to adverse enjoyment, only from the accruing of the right to be barred."

(1) Paid officers.—In Regina v. Braintree Union (The Guardians of the Poor of), (1 Q. B. 130,) it was held that, the poor-law commissioners may order the guardians of a union to appoint a chaplain for the union workhouse, with a salary; such chaplain being an officer within the meaning of Stat. 4 & 5 Gul. 4, c. 76, s. 46, interpreted by sect. 109; and that it was no objection to such order that, by a previous order, not expressly altered or rescinded, the commissioners had authorized the guardians to appoint such chaplain if they deemed it necessary, and had specified his duties in case of his appointment.

Lord Denman delivering the judgment of the court in the following language: "This was an argument on the return to a writ of mandamus; but it brought into question the validity of the writ, which directed the guardians to appoint a chaplain to a union workhouse, according to an order of the poor-law commissioners that that order is not warranted by the act. The defendants denied that such a power is given by the act, and properly called on the prosecutors to shew what provision of the act could be carried into execution by the chaplain of a workhouse, as the paid officers to be appointed under the forty-sixth clause must be appointed either with reference to the administration of the relief and employment of the poor, or to auditing of accounts, or to the general terms, 'otherwise carrying the provisions of this act into execution;' and it was admitted that this appointment could not be referred to either of the two former objects.

"The effect of these general terms was much considered in the recent case of Regina v. The Poor-Law Commissioners, in the matter of the Cambridge Union, (9 A. & E. 911,) and the language used by the judges on that occasion was pressed upon us in argument. We there held that the appointment of a collector of poor-rates was not within those general terms, because there is no provision of the act which has any reference to the collection of the poor-rates, they being made and collected under other acts, and the act in question applying only to the expenditure of those rates after they are collected. The only provision to be found in the act, which could authorize the appointment of a collector, was that respecting a union of parishes for the purpose of rating; in which case the rate would be made and collected under the act in question; and the cases of such unions afforded occasions on which the interpretation clause containing the word 'collector' under the head of 'officer,' might operate. The same interpretation clause, under the same head of 'officer,' has the word 'clergymen;' and, applying the same tests as were applied in the case in 9 Adolphus and Ellis, the result will appear to be very different. It is true that no provision is to be found in the act in question directly authorizing the appointment of a chaplain, or even using the word 'chaplain,' or any word of a similar import; but the 19th section plainly shows the intention of the legislature, that the inmates of the union workhouse, of whatever religious persuasion, should have religious assistance from ministers of their own persuasion; it shews moreover that some general regulations for affording such assistance to the inmates were intended, as well as some exceptions and particular regulations in favour of those who dissent, and could not conscientiously reap the benefit of those general regulations. Then the 42nd section, giving power to the commissioners to make rules and regulations for the government of workhouses, makes it further incumbent upon them to carry into effect the intentions of the legislature, as shewn in the 19th section. In these sections, therefore, are to be found the provisions of the act as to religious assistance and instruction to the inmates of the workhouse; and the 46th section gives the commissioners the means of carrying into effect those provisions in the only way in which it could be done beneficially, namely, by enabling them to call on the guardians to appoint a chaplain with an adequate salary, who, by the interpretation clause, comes clearly under the head of a paid 'officer.'

"This is not the only instance of such indirect provision in this act. Medical attendance is evidently contemplated; yet there is no specific enactment as to the appointment of medical men; but they are included in the interpretation clause under the head of 'officer,' in the same manner as 'clergymen.' Neither were chaplains of workhouses unknown to the law; for many local acts of parliament contain express provisions respecting their appointment. Indeed, that circumstance was used in argument by the counsel in favour of the return, as furnishing something on which the word 'clergymen' is the interpretation clause might operate, and so make it unnecessary to find any part of the act in question to which to apply it. But, whatever force may belong to that argument, it would be very strange if the act meant to give the commissioners by express provision a control over chaplains under local acts, and not allow them to create similar duties and officers in the establishment which they were themselves to form.

"Remarks of this nature are by no means conclusive; we have no inclination to affirm judicially that the law has called a power into existence, merely because there is a probability of its having intended to do so, or because it may have manifested the wish to have something done for which that power would furnish the means. But we have no doubt that the religious instruction of the inmates was intended to be involved in the management of the workhouse, and that the legislature actually intended to give a general power the poor, and for the examining and auditing, allowing or disallowing of accounts in such parish or union, or united parishes, and otherwise carrying the provisions of this act into execution; and the said commissioners may and they are hereby empowered to define and specify and direct the execution of the respective duties of such officers, and the places or limits within which the same shall be performed, and direct the mode of the appointment and determine the continuance in office or dismissal of such officers, and the amount and nature of the security to be given by each of the said officers as the said commissioners shall think ought to give security, and when the said commissioners may see occasion, to regulate the amount of salaries payable to such officers respectively, and the time and mode of payment thereof, and the proportions in which such respective parishes or unions shall contribute to such payment; and such salaries shall be chargeable upon and payable out of the poor-rates of such parish or union, or respective parishes, in the manner and proportion fixed by the said commissioners, and shall be recoverable against the overseers or guardians of such parish or union or parishes, by all such ways and means as the salaries of assistant overseers or other paid officers of any parish or union are recoverable by law; and all such payments shall be valid, and shall be allowed in the accounts of the overseers or guardians paying the same.

Provided always, and be it further enacted, that if in any case it shall seem expedient to the lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland for the time being and his majesty's privy council there, to remove any such suspension and to give authority for the appointment to any office, dignity, or rectory, subject to the severance therefrom of all and every the tithes, glebes, lands, rents, profits, and emoluments whatsoever appertaining thereto, it shall be lawful for the lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland for the time being and his majesty's privy council there, to remove such suspension accordingly, on the condition hereinbefore contained.

"III. Provided also, and be it further enacted, that whenever any right of presentation, nomination, or appointment to any vicarage or perpetual or other curacy shall be annexed or incident to any office, dignity, or rectory, the appointment to which shall be so suspended, then and in every such case such right of presentation, nomination, or appointment shall, upon every avoidance of such vicarage or perpetual curacy which shall happen during such suspension, belong to and be exercised by the same person or persons, or body or bodies corporate, by whom the right of appointment to such office, dignity, or rectory might have been exercised in case the same had not been suspended.

"IV. And whereas it is by the said recited act, amongst other things, enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners to settle and adjudge the proportions of crown rents, port corn rents, pensions, procurations, synodals, and the salaries of the schoolmasters of the diocesan schools, which the incumbents of any parish or parishes divided or augmented pursuant to the provisions of the said recited act are respectively to pay; and whereas it is expedient that the said provision should be extended to other charges affecting such parishes; be it therefore enacted, that all duties, powers, and authorities which are imposed upon or vested in the said commissioners by virtue of the said recited act and of this act, or of either of them, touching or concerning the settlement or adjudication of the proportions of such crown rents, port corn rents, pensions, procurations, synodals, and salaries so to be paid as aforesaid, shall extend and be applicable to the settlement and adjudication of the proportions of all other charges whatever charged upon or payable out of such divided or augmented parishes to be paid by the several incumbents thereof respectively after such division or augmentation; and such last-mentioned proportions shall be adjusted and registered in such manner as in and by the said act is directed, and shall be binding and conclusive upon the said several incumbents of such divided or augmented parish or parishes respectively, and their respective successors, any law or custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

"V. And whereas the provisions of the said act for the disappropriation of parishes, or the tithes or portions of tithes and glebes thereof, from the dignities to which the same may be united or appropriated, are limited to cases in which there are vicars or curates discharging the duties of such parishes; and it is expedient to remove such limitation; be it therefore enacted, that where there shall not be any vicar or curate in any parish which, or the tithes or any portions of the tithes and glebes whereof, may be appropriated or united to any archbishopric, bishopric, deanery, archdeaconry, dignity, prebend, or canonry, it shall and may be lawful for the said lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors and council, if they shall so think fit, by and with the consent and approbation of the archbishop, bishop, dean, archdeacon, dignitary, prebendary, or canon thereof, or whosoever such archbishopric, bishopric, deanery, archdeaconry, dignity, prebend, or canonry shall be void, to disappropriate, disunite, and divest such parish, and all tithes, portions of tithes, or glebes thereunto belonging, from and out of such archbishopric, bishopric, deanery, archdeaconry, dignity, prebend, or canonry, and, if they shall so think fit, to order and direct that such parish, tithes or portions of tithes, or glebes, so disunited shall from thenceforward be united and annexed to any neighbouring rectory, vicarage, or perpetual curacy, as hereinafter mentioned, or shall be and become for ever a separate benefice and parish; provided nevertheless, that in the rectory, vicarage, or perpetual curacy to which such disappropriated parish tithes or portions of tithes or glebes may be united, or in the separate benefice and parish into which the said disappropriated parish, tithes or portions of tithes, or glebes may be formed, divine service shall be constantly and duly celebrated; and if the same shall be made a separate benefice and parish, then and in such case it shall and may be lawful for the king's majesty, or other person or persons, or body or bodies corporate, having the right of nomination, appointment, or presentation to such archbishopric, bishopric, deanery, archdeaconry, dignity, prebend, or canonry, from time to time to present, collate, nominate, and appoint a clerk to be the incumbent of such parish; and such clerk when duly presented, instituted or collated, and inducted, and his successors, shall be and become bodies politic and corporate, and shall be perpetually endowed with all the tithes, portions of tithes, and glebes so belonging to such parish, and so disappropriated, disunited, and divested as aforesaid, and shall have the actual cure of souls of and within the said parish.

"VI. And be it enacted, that where under this or any other act any parish in which there shall be any perpetual curate endowed shall be disappropriated or disunited from any ecclesiastical dignity or benefice, such curate shall immediately upon such disappropriation or disunion, and by virtue thereof, be and become rector or vicar, as the case may be, of the parish so disappropriated or disunited; and such perpetual curacy shall merge in the said rectory or vicarage.

"VII. And be it further enacted, that in any case in which the said lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland and council shall have power and authority under the provisions of the said recited act or this act, and shall think fit, to disappropriate, disunite, and divest, any rectory, vicarage, tithes or portions of tithes, and glebes, or part or parts thereof, from and out of any archbishopric, bishopric, deanery, archdeaconry, dignity, prebend, or canonry, it shall and may be lawful for such lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors and council, if they shall so think fit, to unite and annex to any adjoining or neighbouring rectory, vicarage, or perpetual curacy as aforesaid, such rectory, vicarage, tithes, or glebes, or any part or parts or portions thereof respectively, which shall so have been disappropriated, disunited, or divested as aforesaid, together with the actual cure of souls within such rectory or vicarage, or such part or parts thereof as shall be so united or annexed respectively, or within such place or places respectively whereof the tithes or glebes shall be so united and annexed; and in such case the said lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors and council shall direct and regulate the rotations or turns in which the right of presentation or nomination to such adjoining or neighbouring rectory, vicarage, or perpetual cure shall upon any and every future avoidance thereof belong to or be exercised by and between the king's majesty, his heirs and successors, and by and between any other person or persons, or corporation or corporations, in like manner as the said lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors and council are authorized and empowered to do in case any rectory, vicarage, tithes or portions of tithes, or glebes or portions thereof, has or have been or shall be united to any vicarage or perpetual curacy, pursuant to the provisions of the said recited act.

"VIII. And whereas by the said act it is made lawful for the lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland, with the privy council there, in case of vacancy, or with the consent therein mentioned, to disappropriate, disunite, and divest any rectory, vicarage, tithes or portions of tithes, or glebe, from any archbishopric, bishopric, deanery, archdeaconry, dignity, prebend, or canonry, and to unite the same to the vicarages, perpetual or other curacies, or such parishes respectively, so as to form a distinct parish or benefice; be it enacted, that the said provision shall extend to parishes in towns where ministers' money is paid, whether there be any tithe or glebe belonging thereto or not; and that it shall and may be lawful for the lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland, with the privy council there, in case of a vacancy, or with the consent of the dignitary, prebendary, canon, or other ecclesiastical person having the cure of souls in any such parish in right of or appointment to his said dignity, prebend, or canonry, to

And be it enacted, that when and as the bishoprics of Ferns and Leighlin and of Cloyne respectively shall be united to the bishoprics of Ossory and of Cork and Ross, the said ecclesiastical commissioners shall and may in like manner, and by all such and the like means, recover from the persons or their representatives by whose promotion or death such vacancy shall have occurred or been occasioned, or who shall become the bishops of such united sees, all such sums as the successors in such bishoprics of Ferns and Leighlin and Cloyne respectively would have been entitled to recover for dilapidations in case this act had not been made.

“XV. And be it further enacted, that whenever pursuant to the provisions of the said recited act, and with such consent as therein required, the see house of any bishopric in the first column of the schedule (B) to the said act annexed shall be or have been chosen to be the see house of any united bishopric, such see house, and the offices, and the whole or a part only of the menal or demesne lands thereto belonging, which are set out as a fair equivalent for the whole or a part only of the surrendered menal or demesne lands belonging to the bishopric in the second column of the schedule (B), as the case may be, shall without any grant or conveyance whatsoever be divested out of the said ecclesiastical commissioners, and become vested in the bishop of such united bishopric, and annexed thereto, and thereafter continue to be to all intents and purposes the see house, offices, and menal or demesne lands of such united bishopric.

“XVI. And be it enacted, that all lands, tenements, and all estates, terms, and interests therein, whether legal or equitable, and all benefit and right of removal of or in the same, which at the time of the passing of the said recited act were or now are vested in the trustees and commissioners of first-fruits in Ireland, shall be and the same are hereby absolutely transferred to and vested in the said ecclesiastical commissioners and their successors, in like manner, and upon and for the like trusts, intents, and purposes, as the same were heretofore vested in the said trustees and commissioners of first-fruits.

And be it further enacted, that in case any tenant or lessee, who under the provisions of the said recited act is or shall be entitled to apply and agree to have applied and agreed for, the purchase of a perpetual estate in any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, shall hold such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, by lease for the term of twenty-one years, whereof less than thirty-nine years shall be to come and unexpired, or for the term of forty years, whereof less than thirty-nine years shall be to come and unexpired, or for three lives, or for the lives named in such lease shall not be in being, then and in every such case it shall and may be lawful for every such tenant or lessee to tender to the archbishop, bishop, or other sole ecclesiastical corporation, under whom he shall hold such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or to his or their known agent or attorney, such sum or sums as he shall consider to be the true and just amount of the fine or fines and fees customarily paid or payable for or upon the purchase of such perpetual estate in such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, and in case such archbishop, bishop, or other sole ecclesiastical corporation refuse or neglect within a reasonable time after such tender to accept of such sum or sums of money and execute such renewal, then and in every such case it shall and may be lawful for the said ecclesiastical commissioners, and they are authorized and required, at the requisition in writing of such tenant or lessee, to ascertain by the issuing of a commission or by such other ways and means as they shall deem fit and expedient, the amount of the renewal fines usually or customarily paid or payable on or for the renewal of such lease, and the sum which, according to the usual and accustomed mode of renewing the same, ought to be paid on the renewal thereof, up to the day upon and from which the rent to be reserved by the deed or deeds of conveyance of such lands and premises is to begin; and such tenant or lessee shall, upon payment to the said ecclesiastical commissioners, to and for the use of such archbishop, bishop, or other sole ecclesiastical corporation respectively, of such sum so ascertained as aforesaid, and of the interest and arrears of rent due upon such lease, be entitled to have a conveyance made of the fee-simple and inheritance of and in the said lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in like manner as if such lease had been fully renewed for such term or lives respectively as in and by the said recited act is required: and in case no tenant or lessee holding any lands or premises by lease for the term of twenty-one years or of forty years, whereof less than one year shall be to come and unexpired, shall be entitled to have any deeds of conveyance of such lands and premises made or granted to him or her by virtue of the said recited act and of the provisions thereof, unless, in addition to all rents and arrears of rent due and reserved by such lease, he or she shall have paid and satisfied to the archbishop, bishop, or other ecclesiastical person under whom he or she shall hold such lands and premises, or to the said ecclesiastical commissioners, a proper proportion of the fine or fines and fees usually and customarily paid and payable on the renewal of such lease, up to and for such day upon and from which the rent to be reserved in and by such deed of conveyance is to begin to be paid.

And be it enacted, that whenever upon any application for the purchase of such perpetual estate in any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, the said ecclesiastical commissioners shall be satisfied that the sum or sums of money tendered by the applicant is or are the true and just amount of the fine or fines and fees customarily paid or payable for or upon the purchase of such perpetual estate in such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, and that the applicant is entitled to the purchase of such perpetual estate in such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, then and in every such case it shall and may be lawful for the said ecclesiastical commissioners, and they are authorized and required, to execute such renewal, and to make such conveyance of the fee-simple and inheritance of and in the said lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in like manner as if such lease had been fully renewed for such term or lives respectively as in and by the said recited act is required.

chase of the fee-simple and inheritance in any lands under the provisions of the said recited act or this act, or for the renewal of any lease, or the making a new lease or demise of any lands held under the said ecclesiastical commissioners, such commissioners may be authorized and required to ascertain the amount of any fine or fines and fees theretofore paid or agreed to be paid or customarily paid or payable for renewal of such lease, and that such commissioners shall find that the fine or fines and fees paid during any such period as in the said act mentioned, or agreed to be paid or payable for the renewal of such lease, have been greatly inadequate as compared with the fine or fines and fees usually paid according to the custom of the same diocese or other spiritual promotion for or upon the renewal of leases or interests in other lands within such diocese or other spiritual promotion held by like tenure and demise, and that such commissioners shall have reasonable cause to conclude that such inadequacy arose out of any favour or community of interest between the lessor and lessee, then and in such case the matter shall be referred to three arbitrators, to be appointed in manner by the said recited act provided for the appointment of arbitrators to adjust differences between the said commissioners and parties applying for the purchase of perpetuities under the said act; and the expense of such arbitration shall be borne by the said commissioners, or by the other party, or by both, in such proportions as such arbitrators shall direct; and if such arbitrators shall decide that the fine or fines and fees aforesaid were not greatly inadequate, or that such inadequacy did not arise out of any favour or community of interest between the lessor and lessee, the said commissioners shall proceed to make their calculation as by the said act required upon such fine or fines and fees so paid or agreed to be paid or payable, and in all respects as if no inadequacy had been alleged to exist; but if the said arbitrators shall decide that such fine or fines and fees were greatly inadequate, and that such inadequacy arose out of any favour or community of interest between the lessor and lessee, then and in such case the said arbitrators, or any two of them, shall and are hereby authorized and empowered to inquire and ascertain, by actual survey and valuation, or by the examination of witnesses upon oath, (which oath the said arbitrators are hereby authorized to administer,) or by such other ways and means as they shall deem fit and expedient, the yearly value of the lands, tenements, and hereditaments, the tenant or lessee whereof shall so have applied for such renewal or purchase, and the fine or fines and fees which ought reasonably to have been paid for the renewal of such lease or interest in such lands in proportion to the yearly value thereof, according to the custom of the same diocese or other spiritual promotion, upon the renewal of leases or interests in other lands and tenements situate within the same respectively, and held upon the like tenure and demise; and the determination of such arbitrators, as to the amount of such fine or fines and fees, shall be conclusive and binding upon all persons whomsoever; and the fine or fines and fees so ascertained shall be deemed and taken to be for all purposes of the said recited act and of this act the renewal fine or fines and fees respectively theretofore paid, agreed to be paid or payable, or which ought to have been paid upon the renewal of the said lease or interest in such lands, tenements, and hereditaments, the tenant or lessee whereof shall so have applied for such renewal or purchase as aforesaid.

declared and enacted to be the intent and meaning of the said act and this act, that any such immediate or meane tenant shall, notwithstanding his acquisition of the fee-simple and inheritance of such lands, and the merger of any previously subsisting term, estate, or interest therein, have all such and the like remedies, by distress, re-entry, action, or otherwise, for the recovery of the rents and duties reserved in any under-lease by him theretofore made, which he might or would have had in case he had not so acquired such fee-simple and inheritance, and as would have been incident to his reversion in such previously subsisting term, estate, or interest.

“XXXIV. And whereas such purchase of the fee-simple and inheritance of and in such lands, tenements, and hereditaments, by any such under-tenant will be beneficial to the first and all other tenants thereof intervening between such archbishop, bishop, or other ecclesiastical corporation sole and the under-tenant or under-tenants making such purchase; be it therefore enacted, that whenever such under-tenant of any lands, tenements, and hereditaments shall have contracted for the purchase of the fee-simple and inheritance thereof in manner aforesaid the said commissioners are hereby required to ascertain whether any and what proportion of the purchase money on any such purchase ought to be contributed by such first and other intervening tenants thereof as aforesaid; and when the said commissioners shall have ascertained the proportion or respective proportions of the purchase money to be contributed by such first and other intervening tenants as aforesaid respectively, it shall and may be lawful to and for the under-tenant so contracting to purchase as aforesaid, his heirs, executors, or administrators, by notice in writing to be given to such first and other intervening tenant or tenants, or his or their known agent or receiver, agents or receivers, to call upon and require such first and other intervening tenant or tenants to contribute his or their said proportion or respective proportions of such purchase money accordingly; and in case any such first or other intervening tenant shall refuse or neglect to contribute such his proportion of the said purchase money for the space of six calendar months after such notice shall have been given to him or his known agent or receiver, then and in such case the said commissioners shall make a corresponding deduction from the said perpetual rent-charge so directed to be reserved to him as aforesaid, such deduction to be equal to six pounds per centum per annum on the proportion of the said purchase money which he shall be so required to contribute as aforesaid; and the said commissioners shall cause the amount of every rent-charge so reduced to be inserted in or indorsed upon the conveyance of the said lands, tenements, and hereditaments to such under-tenant accordingly; and such reduced perpetual rent-charge shall thenceforth for ever be payable in lieu of the rent-charge hereinbefore directed to be reserved to such intervening tenant respectively, his heirs or assigns, as aforesaid; provided always, that in case any such tenant or lessee shall be dissatisfied with the amount of the rent-charge or proportion of the purchase money adjudged payable in manner aforesaid to or by him, the matter shall be referred to three arbitrators, one to be appointed by the tenant to whom the same is adjudged to be payable, and the other by the tenant proposing to purchase as aforesaid, and the third by the two arbitrators so appointed as aforesaid, in manner provided in the said act for the appointment of arbitrators to adjust differences between the said commissioners and tenants or lessees applying for the purchase of perpetuities under that act, and with the like powers and authorities, so far as the same are applicable; and the determination of such arbitrators as to the amount of such rent-charge or proportion of such purchase money shall be conclusive and binding upon all persons whomsoever, and the expense of such arbitration shall be borne by such party as the arbitrators shall direct.

“XXXV. And be it further enacted, that in case the lands, tenements, and hereditaments proposed to be purchased by any such first or immediate tenant or by any under-tenant respectively, as the case may be, shall be and constitute part only of the lands, tenements, and hereditaments held under lease from any archbishop, bishop, or other ecclesiastical corporation sole, or under any intermediate lease, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said commissioners to ascertain the

"XXXVIII. Provided always, and be it further enacted, that before the execution of any conveyance to any under-tenant or under-tenants under the provisions of this act, he or they shall prove to the satisfaction of the said ecclesiastical commissioners that the notice or notices required by this act have been duly given; and that after the expiration of one year from the completion of any purchase by any under-tenant or under-tenants, under the provisions of this act, the same shall not afterwards be impeached or called in question by reason of any such notice or notices not having been given as aforesaid, nor by reason of any imperfection in any such notice or notices.

"XL. And whereas it is by the said recited act amongst other things enacted, that the officiating curate or minister officiating as curate of every parish, union, chapelry, or perpetual curacy in Ireland, and the dean and chapter or chapter of every such cathedral and parochial church or cathedral used as a parish church in Ireland, shall, on or before the first day of June in each and every year succeeding the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, prepare or cause to be prepared such estimate containing such items and particulars as are in the said act mentioned, and that such estimate shall be transmitted by such person or persons whose duty it is to prepare the same to the ordinary of the diocese on or before the first day of July in each and every year succeeding the said year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three; and it is by the said recited act further enacted, that the said ecclesiastical commissioners shall pay or cause to be paid on the first day of September in each year, for the maintenance of all and every the person or persons who at the passing of the said act was or were or should thereafter be appointed clerk or clerks of such parish, union, or chapelry, or chapel of ease, as therein mentioned, certain salaries or to grant certain allowances in the said act mentioned: and whereas it is expedient that the respective periods for preparing and transmitting such estimate and for paying such sums as aforesaid should be left to the discretion of the said ecclesiastical commissioners; be it therefore enacted, that the said estimates shall be prepared and transmitted at such convenient times, and shall be made and calculated for such period, commencing on such day and ending on such day in each year, as the said ecclesiastical commissioners shall from time to time think fit to direct and signify by writing under their corporate seal to the person or persons whose duty it may be from time to time to prepare and transmit the same; and that such payments on account of salaries or maintenance to clerks heretofore or hereafter to be appointed shall be made at such convenient time in each year as the said commissioners shall appoint and direct; any thing in the said recited act contained to the contrary hereof notwithstanding.

“XLI. And whereas it was by the said recited act provided, that all rates or assessments upon any parish, union, chapelry, or place, or the inhabitants thereof, or any of them, for certain purposes in the said act mentioned, and all proceedings for the making, assessing, applotting, or levying the same, should from and after the commencement of the said act wholly cease and determine, and that every rate, assessment, or applotment, for any church purpose whatsoever should be and be deemed to be by all courts of justice totally void as to so much thereof as provides for the church purposes, or any of them, in such act mentioned; and it was also by the said act provided, that in all parishes and places where by virtue of any law, statute, or custom, provision may have been theretofore made by vestry or other assessment for the maintenance of any curate, lecturer, clerk, or other minister or assistant, in the celebration of divine worship, or attendant or sexton, such provision by vestry or other assessment should from and after the passing of the said act wholly cease and determine, and future provision for such church and other purposes was made by the said act from and after the commencement thereof: and whereas it is necessary, by reason of the said enactments, that provision should be made for the purposes aforesaid for the period of the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty three, intervening between the commencement of the said act and the Easter week next preceding, and also for all such charges and expenses incurred previous to the commencement of the said act as would or ought to have been defrayed by vestry assessment in case the said act had not been made; be it therefore enacted, that so much of the said recited act as disables any vestry called or holden in or for any parish, union, chapelry, or place, or any person or persons, from making, assessing, applotting, or levying any rate or assessment for any of the purposes in the said act mentioned, and so much of the said act as authorizes and requires the said ecclesiastical commissioners to issue and pay the sums required for the several matters and things by such act directed to be included in the estimates to be annually transmitted to the said commissioners, or as authorized the said commissioners to make provision for the maintenance of any curate, lecturer, clerk, or other minister or assistant in the celebration of divine worship, or attendant or sexton, in lieu of any provision by vestry assessment or otherwise theretofore made for such purposes by any law, statute, or custom, shall take effect and be deemed to have taken effect from the commencement of the Easter week in the said year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, and that any such rate or assessment made in such week, or at any time after and previous to the commencement of the said act, shall be utterly null and void in so far as respects any of the church purposes in the said act mentioned, but no further; and that supplementary estimates for the said period intervening between Easter week in the said year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, and the commencement of the said act shall with all convenient speed be prepared, certified, and transmitted to the said commissioners in manner and form by the said act prescribed in respect of the annual estimates to be transmitted to the said commissioners.

“XLII. And whereas it was by the said recited act provided, that certain parts of an act made in the parliament of the United Kingdom, in the seventh year of his late majesty King George the Fourth, intituled, ‘An Act to consolidate and amend the Laws which regulate the Levy and Application of Church Rates and Parish Rates, and the Election of Churchwardens, and the Maintenance of Parish Clerks, in Ireland,’ should be and the same were thereby repealed, but doubts and difficulties have arisen as to the mode of obtaining relief against such rates and assessments as have been rendered illegal by such repeal, by reason of the recognizances, notices, and other formalities made necessary by the said act of the seventh year of his late majesty King George the Fourth, in order to constitute an effectual Every parishioner to vote at vestries without distinction.

“XLIII. And be it further declared and enacted, that at every vestry to be hereafter at any time called or holden in any parish, union, or chapelry, for the purpose of making any cess, rate, assessment, or applotment whatsoever, it shall be lawful for every parishioner, of whatever religious persuasion he may be, who shall be chargeable to such cess, rate, assessment, or applotment in such parish, union, or chapelry, to vote at such vestry respecting every matter or business therein brought forward.

Commissioners enabled to ascertain the amount of existing charges on parishes for purposes for which vestry assessments are now prohibited, and to pay them off.

“XLIV. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said ecclesiastical commissioners to inquire into and ascertain the amount of all such sums as may have been, at or previous to Easter week in the said year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, charged or chargeable upon any parish, union, or chapelry, for or on account of any balance of account, costs, damages, or expenses due to any churchwarden, or to any clerk or sexton for his maintenance, and also the amount of any arrears of vestry cess accrued due and not collected for the years one thousand eight hundred and thirty-one or one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two with which any churchwarden may have been charged in his account, and which he may have paid and cannot recover, and also the amount of all sums which any churchwarden or person may have paid or for which he may be liable on behalf of any parish, union, or chapelry, for any purpose now executed, and for which a vestry assessment may have been made in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-one or one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two or one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, not exceeding the arrears due upon such assessment; and the said commissioners, having satisfied themselves of the amount of all such sums as aforesaid, shall, in such manner and to such extent, and subject to such regulations as they in their discretion shall think just and necessary, pay the said sums to the persons respectively entitled thereto.

Commissioners of public works in Ireland may lend the ecclesiastical commissioners a sum not exceeding 100,000*l*.

“XLV. And whereas it is necessary, in order to enable the said ecclesiastical commissioners to provide for the purposes heretofore defrayed by vestry assessment according to the provisions of the said recited act and this act, that such commissioners should be empowered to borrow a sum of money by way of mortgage or loan on the credit of the funds accruing to them under the provisions of the said act; be it therefore enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the commissioners acting under and in execution of an act made in the second and third years of the reign of his present majesty, intituled, ‘An Act for the Extension and Promotion of Public Works in Ireland,’ by and with the consent and approbation of the lords commissioners of his majesty’s treasury, to lend and advance to the said ecclesiastical commissioners such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole one hundred thousand pounds, as they shall think proper, to be repaid to the said commissioners for the extension and promotion of public works in Ireland, in such manner and at such times, with interest for the same, at and after such rate, not exceeding four pounds per centum per annum on the sum or sums so advanced, as the said commissioners of the treasury shall direct and require; and all sums so lent and advanced shall, with the interest from time to time accruing due thereon, be and the same are hereby charged upon all and every the rents, issues, and profits of all lands, tenements, or hereditaments, and the annual tax and the proceeds thereof, and all and every sum or sums of money, or

"XLVI. And be it enacted, that the said recited act of the last session of parliament for altering and amending the laws relating to the temporalities of the church in Ireland shall continue in full force and effect, save and except so far as the same is expressly repealed or altered by this present act; and that the said recited act and this act shall be construed together as one act to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

must elapse before the same can be brought to a termination: and His Majesty has been graciously pleased to signify, that, in order to promote the objects of the said commission, it is His Majesty's intention to defer to any vacant dignity, prebend, canonry, or benefice without cure, which may be in the patronage of the crown, until the circumstances connected with it shall have undergone the consideration of the said commissioners: and the archbishops, and divers of the bishops of England and Wales, have intimated their intention of pursuing the same course with regard to similar preferments in their respective patronage, (excepting only the dignity of archdeacon,) and a declaration has been made by certain other patrons: and whereas, by the said act, prebends, canonries, and benefices without cure of souls have since the said fourth day of February last, and others may become vacant during the said inquiries now in progress; and it is expedient that the said vacancies should not remain vacant until it shall be decided in what mode they can be most advantageously filled, so as to be made most conducive to the efficiency of the established system, and with that view it is necessary to provide that due care be taken of such dignities, prebends, canonries, and benefices, and that the election or collation thereto shall not lapse by reason of delay in such collation: be it therefore enacted by the king's most excellent Majesty, with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that, if any dignity, prebend, canonry, or benefice without cure of souls, which has been in the patronage of His Majesty, or of any archbishop, bishop, or other patron of England or Wales, has become vacant since the said fourth day of February last, and remains vacant during the existence of the said commission now in force, all the profits and emoluments which have arisen or accrued, and shall arise and accrue, from every such vacant dignity, prebend, canonry, or benefice, until a successor shall have been appointed thereto, whether from the crown, or hereditaments to the same belonging, or from rents, fines, advowsons, or other emoluments belonging to any chapter or other ecclesiastical corporation, of which the dignitary, prebendary, canon, or incumbent last in possession, or who was a member, shall be paid to the treasurer for the time being of the said bounty of Queen Anne, in as full and ample manner as such dignitary, canon, or incumbent, if he had remained in possession, or had been duly appointed, inducted, or installed, would be entitled to receive: and the said treasurer shall, for the purpose of enforcing payment of all such emoluments, have and enjoy all legal rights, powers, and remedies, in law, or in equity, or by way of action, suit, or distress, as the case may be, which would belong to the said dignitary, canon, or incumbent, if he had remained in possession, or had been duly appointed, inducted, or installed, provided always, that such treasurer shall not have the power of presenting to any benefice with cure of souls: provided also, that the said treasurer shall not be answerable or accountable for any monies received by him under this act which shall not have been actually received by him: and be it further enacted, that such treasurer shall keep an account of the monies received by him under this act separate from all other funds in his hands, and shall, in respect whereof the same shall be paid, allow all costs, expenses, and outgoings which would have been incurred by the said dignitary, canon, or incumbent, if he had remained in possession, or had been duly appointed, inducted, or installed, or may be reasonably incurred in the receipt of the said monies, and the payment of the sums received, the amount thereof being allowed to the said treasurer for the time being, and shall retain the said monies until he shall be otherwise ordered by competent authority: provided always, and be it enacted, that nothing in this act contained shall affect any profits or emoluments of any dignity, prebend, canonry, or benefice without cure of souls, which shall have been already divided or carried to any other use, according to the statutes, customs, or usages of the cathedral or church in which such dignity may be founded: provided also, and be it enacted, that nothing in this act contained shall affect the right of any archbishop, bishop, or other patron of any dignity, prebend, canonry, or benefice without cure of souls, which may have or hereafter shall become vacant, from appointing a successor thereto in case he shall think proper to do so.

"V. And be it further enacted, that where any benefice with cure of souls, being in the patronage of the holder or incumbent of any such dignity, prebend, canonry, or benefice as aforesaid without cure of souls, shall have become or shall become vacant during the vacancy of such last-mentioned dignity, prebend, canonry, or benefice, the patron of such last-mentioned dignity, prebend, canonry, or benefice, shall be entitled to present to such benefice with cure of souls.

catholic clergyman; Anne Mullhaire being still alive.

On behalf of the prisoner, it was submitted that the prisoner must be acquitted. That in an indictment for bigamy, it was essen- tial to prove two valid, legal, and binding marriages in the lifetime of the person. That the marriage in 1827 was out of the question, except so far as the relationship that existed between the person, the prisoner then married, and Anne Mullhaire; and that the marriage with Anne Mullhaire was an invalid marriage, having been a ceremony performed between two Roman catholics, not according to the ritual of their church, and by a person who had at the time no jurisdic- tion or authority to perform such a cere- mony, save as a presbyterian minister, and as such his marriage was invalid. Regina v. Mills, 1 Jebb & Bourke (Irish), 219. Upon another ground, also, that marriage was wholly void; the second section of Stat. 5 & 6 Gul. 4, c. 54, having enacted, "that al marriages which shall hereafter be celebrated between persons within the prohibited de- grees of consanguinity or affinity, shall be absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever." That statute was passed in August, 1835, prior to the marriage with Anne Mullhaire, and one of the degrees of affinity in the list of prohibited degrees, is the Book of Common Prayer, is the "wife's mother's sister," which was the precise de- gree of affinity subsisting between Anne Mullhaire and the prisoner. That the mar- riage with Anne Mullhaire, being therefore upon such grounds null and void, the prisoner had not committed the crime of bigamy.

To these arguments, the counsel for the crown replied, that the Rev. Mr. Crotty was an ordained priest of the Roman catholic church, and not the less a priest, because he abjured the tenets of that church, or by the decrees of that church had been forbidden to perform the marriage ceremony. This, there- fore, distinguished the case from Regina v. Mills, (Ibid.) and Regina v. Smith, (2 Cruse- ford & Dix (Irish), 318,) which turned upon the fact that the person celebrating the mar- riage was not in holy orders. But that the matter was put beyond doubt by Stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 113, which passed on the 12th of August, 1842, and confirmed all marriages theretofore celebrated in Ireland, by pres- byterian or other dissenting ministers or teachers.

As to the second objection. That this marriage was not within the "prohibited de- grees" referred to in Stat. 5 & 6 Gul. 4, c. 54. Those words must be understood as referring to degrees prohibited by the common or sta- tute law, and not by the canons; for the canons, though the violation of them might subject a clergyman to ecclesiastical cre- sures, could not be held binding on the laity. Middleton v. Croft, 2 Str. 1846. That the prohibited degrees as known to and recog- nized by our law, were precisely detailed in merely voidable: be it therefore enacted by the king's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and complied by the law to a marriage where there has not been a due publication of banns, and I am not at liberty to enter into that question; but, morally speaking, and using the common acceptation of the term, it is a secret and clandestine marriage, purposely and studiously concealed from the knowledge of those who were directly interested to prevent one of the parties from entering into the unhallowed contract. Lastly, it is a case calling for the interference of the court; because, as I collect from the libel, there has been no cohabitation of the parties since the marriage, so that it is not too late now for the court to prevent the consummation of the offence, if the law has not placed an insuperable barrier to any proceeding for that salutary purpose.

"That this court would and ought to lend its aid and assistance towards the accomplishment of so desirable an object, cannot be doubted; and I have myself no hesitation in saying, that I should feel great regret if I were to find myself placed in such a situation as to be obliged to reject this libel, and thereby in effect to pronounce that the validity of this marriage could not be questioned. What would be the condition of the parties and of the court, if such should be its present decision? Mr. Sherwood would have a right to claim the consortium of his wife; and if she refused to cohabit with him, he would be entitled to institute a suit in these courts, not for the purpose of compelling her to return to cohabitation in his house, (for into it she has never entered as his wife,) but to afford him the consortium viæ, which she has withheld from him by his own consent from the date of the marriage to the present time. The court would thus be accessory to the commission of that offence, of which there is every reason to believe she is at the present moment innocent. And when the court has issued its fiat to compel her to cohabit with her husband, it may the next day, in another branch of its jurisdiction, be called upon to punish her for the very crime, to the commission of which the court itself has been an instrument; for, looking at the words of the act of parliament, I am by no means prepared to say that, in prohibiting the ecclesiastical courts from annulling marriages of this kind, subsisting at the time of the passing of the act, the legislature has altered the law in any other respect.

"I am not prepared to say, that the parties may not be punished by the ecclesiastical law for the incest, though the validity of the marriage cannot be called in question. How stood the law before this act of parliament? Originally, as now, these marriages were void ab initio, when sentence was pronounced by the ecclesiastical court: and it appears that the ecclesiastical courts were in the habit of annulling these marriages, even after the death of the parties, after the death of both, or of one only. And this seems to have been the practice antecedent to the canon of 1603, as will be evident from a reference to the Articuli Cleri, (2 Inst. 614,) by Archbishop

mons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that all marriages which shall have been celebrated before the passing of this act

Bancroft, in the 3rd James the First, (in the year 1606,) whence it appears that the practice had existed for a long time before, and that the ecclesiastical courts complained of the interference of the temporal courts in cases of ecclesiastical cognisance; and amongst others, (in the 20th article,) 'that a prohibition had been awarded in a case of an incestuous marriage, suggesting, under pretence of a statute of Henry the Eighth, that it appertained to the temporal courts, and not to the ecclesiastical, to determine what marriages are lawful, and what incestuous, by the word of God.' To which the answer of the twelve judges was, 'That these were cases that we (the temporal courts) may deal with, both with marriages and deprivations; as where they (the ecclesiastical courts) will call the marriage in question after the death of any of the parties; the marriage may not then be called in question, because it is to bastardize and disinherit the issue, who cannot so well defend the marriage as the parties, both living, might themselves have done.' The practice, then, clearly existed at that time of declaring these marriages void after the death of the parties, and the temporal courts interfered for the purpose of protecting the interest of the issue of such marriages, and not that of the guilty parties; for, as it appears from the case of Harris v. Hicks, (2 Salk. 548,) in the 4th and 5th of William and Mary, where a man had married the sister of his deceased wife, and it was suggested that the second wife was dead, and a son, the issue of the second marriage, would be entitled to lands; the temporal court in that case issued a prohibition against these courts proceeding to annul the marriage between the parties after the death of one of them, but it did not prohibit them from punishing the survivor for the incest committed during cohabitation.

"If this, then, was the state of the law at that period, what has occurred to alter it since? Nothing but this act of parliament, passed on the 31st August, 1835, the 5th and 6th of William the Fourth, so often adverted to in the course of these proceedings. What did this act of parliament do? The title of it is, 'An Act to render certain Marriages valid, and to alter the Law with respect to certain voidable Marriages.' And if the object of the act had been to declare all such marriages existing at the time of the passing of the act, notwithstanding they were originally illegal, good and valid marriages to all intents and purposes, (as has been contended it does by the learned counsel for Mr. Sherwood,) it might admit of a question, whether under such circumstances, this court could punish the parties for incestuous cohabitation; but the enacting part of the act does not declare any such thing. After declaring in the preamble, 'Whereas, marriages between persons within the prohibited degrees are voidable only by sentence of the ecclesiastical court, pronounced during the lifetime of both the parties thereto, and it is unreasonable that the state and condition of the children of marriages between persons within the prohibited degrees of affinity should remain unsettled during so long a period, and it is fitting that all marriages which may hereafter be celebrated between persons within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity should be ipso facto void, and not merely voidable;' then, in the enacting part of the act, I find these words: 'Be it therefore enacted, that all marriages which shall have been celebrated before the passing of this act between persons being within the prohibited degrees of affinity, shall not be good and valid to all intents and purposes, but 'not hereafter be annulled for that cause by any sentence of the ecclesiastical court, unless pronounced in a suit which shall be depending at the time of the passing of this act;' and the act has nothing to do with marriages within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity.

"The enacting part of the act does not declare these marriages to be good and valid to all intents and purposes, as might be supposed from the title of the act; and although the title, as well as the preamble, may be important where there is any doubt or ambiguity in the enacting part of a statute, when a reference may be made to the title and preamble for the purpose of explaining such doubt and ambiguity; but the title can give no effect to the enacting words of a statute, where those words are plain and unambiguous. I apprehend that they are independent of the title, which can have effect only so far as to obviate and explain doubt or ambiguity in the enacting part of a statute. I do not think, where the enacting part of the statute is to the effect 'that all marriages which shall have been celebrated before the passing of this act between persons being within the prohibited degrees of affinity, shall not hereafter be annulled for that cause by any sentence of the ecclesiastical court,' that this amounts to a prohibition to the ecclesiastical court to punish the parties under another branch of the law for incestuous cohabitation. I apprehend the law is not altered in this respect, and that the court is not prohibited by this act from punishing parties for such cohabitation, although it cannot declare the marriage null and void.

"Again, if we look to the preamble of the act, it is not for the protection of the parties who have been guilty of the offence, for such it is by the ecclesiastical law and by the law of God, but for the protection of the children, for that is the purpose and object of the act, to settle the estate and condition of the innocent issue of such marriages, not to screen the delinquent parties. But whatever may have been the intention of the legislature, and whatever may be the effect of the act of parliament, the marriage had between the two parties, Thomas Moulden Sherwood and Emma Sarah Ray, is an incestuous marriage, and must ever so remain. The law of God cannot be altered by man. The legislature may exempt the parties from punish-from experience; and there is one authority which I will advert to, and only one, which supports the view I have taken, and which is in opposition to the argument used against the admission of the libel. I mean Oughton, in his Ordo Judiciorum, not that part in which he sets forth the different stages of a suit, or parts of the judicium, (for writers differ from each other, and there is some confusion between the causa and the judicium, even the authorities so much adverted to in the argument, and which, though foreign writers, are said to be guides as to our practice,) but in that part where he treats of the order of proceeding in matrimonial suits. That authority (not in the passages which have been adverted or referred to by the counsel for Mr. Sherwood, but in another part of his treatise) speaks of proceedings 'lite pendente,' where there could have been no contestatio litis, and even before the return of the citation. In title 198, where he treats De citatione in causâ matrimoniali, I find it thus laid down by him: 'Si agens in causâ matrimoniali credit vel dubitat partem ream citandam velle (lite pendente) ad alia vota convolare, (id est, cum alio aut contrahere aut solemnizare matrimonium,) curare potest ut in citatione inseratur inhibitiô contra partem ream ne (lite hujusmodi pendente) convolet ad alia vota; matrimoniumve aliunde quovis-modo contrahat, et quod si de facto antea contraxerit, (id est, ante executionem citationis,) illud in facie ecclesiæ solemnizari non procuret, sub poenâ juris et contemptus.' So that, in a proceeding in causâ matrimoniali, if the party against whom the suit is instituted lite pendente, enters into a contract of marriage with another person, the other party has a remedy, and this pendency of suit is ante executionem citationis; so that here is a lite pendens referred to before a contestatio litis. Again, in title 201: 'Si mulier contra quam agitur in causâ matrimoniali, non obstante pendentia litis et inhibitione, (quod lite pendente, non convolare ad alias nuptias,) matrimonium solemnizaverit vel matrimonium contraxerit cum alio; hoc allegato et probato est sequestranda, (sumptibus potentis,) lite pendente.' And there are several other parts of the section, De causâ matrimoniali which speak of a breach of the inhibition pendente lite. In title 31, De contemptu, is this: 'De modo petendi decretum in negotio contemptus in causâ matrimoniali; nempe propter solemnizationem matrimonii (pendente lite) inhibitione judicis in contrarium non obstante.' Again, after reciting the issuing and serving of the citation with the inhibition, it proceeds: 'Quodque (vestris literis inhibitoriis, et executione earundem non obstantibus) ipse, post executionem earundem (in contemptum juris et jurisdictionis vestræ non ferendum) matrimonium quoddam præsumptum (de facto) contraxit cum quodamvis et illud in facie ecclesiæ solemnizari seu potius profanari curavit.' that the sittings of the court were over, so proceedings could have taken place till the first session of Michaelmas Term following, and the party, without any fault of his own, would have been precluded from the benefit of the exception from the prohibitory clause in the act. I consider, then, in the first place, that it is not a technical meaning which we are to apply to the words 'suit depending in the Ecclesiastical court,' no such technical meaning being intended by the legislature; and, secondly, I am of opinion that, if these words were to receive an interpretation according to the technical rules of practice of the court, they would not take away the jurisdiction of this court.

"I therefore entirely agree in opinion with the judge of the court below on this point—that the jurisdiction of the court is not taken away by the act of parliament on the ground that there was no suit depending, touching the validity of this marriage, at the passing of the act, which is requisite in order to bring it within the terms of the exception of the act, which requires that the sentence of nullity should be pronounced in 'a suit which shall be depending at the time of the passing of this act.'"

(2) Property of Parishes:—In Regina v. Abrahams, (4 Q. B. 157,) it appeared, that an individual conveyed lands to private persons in trust, to distribute the rents periodically among the poor of a certain parish. The deed provided that a receiver should be appointed, and who should account to the parishioners from time to time; and that a coffer, of which there should be three locks and three keys, should remain in the parish church for keeping all writings and accounts, and trust monies unexpended; one key to be kept by the receiver, another by the incumbent or curate, and the third by one of the churchwardens. An information was afterwards exhibited in Chancery, praying that a scheme might be approved of for the future management of the charity and application of the funds; and a scheme was accordingly prepared and decreed, regulating the matters referred to in the above prayer, but making no mention of the coffer or keys. On motion for a mandamus to the trustees to deliver one key to the churchwardens: it was held, that the claim of the churchwardens was not merely equitable, but that they had a legal right which might be enforced by mandamus; it was also held to be no objection to the rule, that the charity was a private institution: Lord Denman observing, "I think the claim of the churchwarden to have a key, as being one of the parties named in the deed for that purpose, is a legal right. It is independent of the general administration of the funds. The court does not interfere in the case of dissenting ministers, and in other instances, where the establishments are private. It is true that, in Esparto Rugby Charity (The Trustees of), (9 D. & R. 214,) a mandamus to pay certain persons an increased allowance was refused; but that would clearly have been an interference with the administration of the funds."

By Stat. 38 Geo. 3, c. 68, all the hereditaments and real and personal estates belonging to the school were vested in a corporate body, called "The Governors and Trustees of the School," who were to hold the same in trust for the benefit and maintenance of the school, except the right of election, and appointment of benefices which were to be in the mayor, aldermen, and assistants of the town of Shrewsbury, and the masters of the school, or other of the university of the parish of C.; except as lawful to give such masters of the school, vacated his office of mayor, aldermen, and le trustees, within the meaning of the act 5 & 6 Gul. 4, c. 76, for the regulation of municipal corporations.

Lord Chancellor Cottenham, after stating the letters patent of Edward the Sixth, the indenture of the thirteenth of Elisabeth, and the effect of Stat. 38 Geo. 3, c. 68, down to the end of the twenty-fifth section, proceeded as follows:

"From this it is clear, that the vicarage of Chirbury, and the three curacies of St. Mary's, Astley, and Clive, were originally granted for the benefit of, and formed part of the property of, the school. The very exception shews, that they were considered as part of the estates belonging to the school. So much of the act as I have hitherto stated, which is intitled, 'An Act for the better Government and Regulation of the School,' shews no intention to alter the property, but trusts it as part of the possessions of the school; and although it does not vest the benefices in the new trustees, it provides in certain cases for their improvement and increase out of the income of the charity property. Then comes the twenty-eighth section, which enacts, &c." [His lordship here read that section, and then proceeded:]

"This section effects all that could have been effected for the benefit of the school from such property. It describes the benefices as belonging to the school. It probably was thought, that in order to secure the presentation of proper persons to those benefices, it was safer to vest the right of presentation in a body not capable of being personally benefited by it, rather than in the corporation of the trustees of the school; but it provides that a preference shall be given in the presentations to persons educated at the school, being sons of burgesses or inhabitants of Chirbury; and a preference over these is to be given to retired masters of the school. In what other way could a more beneficial application of the patronage of those benefices have been made for the school, consistently with the paramount object of securing the appointment of proper clergymen for those curacies? It was said, that as there was to be only a preference in case of equality of other qualifications, and as the corporation were to be judges of such equality, the act would, in effect, give to the corporation the unrestricted patronage. No doubt the duties of such a trust are easily evaded, and it is difficult to prove a breach of such a trust; but it is nevertheless a trust, and one of which the abuse, if proved, would be corrected. Every trustee of an advowson may, during the absence or incapacity of the cessui que trusts, have to exercise the patronage of presenting to the living at his own discretion. Of this there may be more or less chance, according to circumstances, but the person so exercising the patronage is not less a trustee. I cannot conceive, that the act intended the corporation to have any other benefit. Their trust strictly was to present deserving persons from amongst the favoured class; and it is only upon the failure of such persons that the right of presentation, without restriction, was to be exercised by them,—a right which must exist in every trustee of an advowson, however small, in some cases, may be the chance of his having to exercise it.

"Such being, in my opinion, the nature of the interest of the corporation of Shrewsbury in these ecclesiastical benefices, the question is, how the Municipal Corporation Reform Act, 5 & 6 Gul. 4, c. 76, acts upon such interests? Sect. 71 provides, that when any body corporate of any borough is seized or possessed of any estate or interest in any hereditaments, in whole or in part, in trust or for the benefit of any charitable uses or trusts whatsoever, all the estate and interest, and all the power of such body corporate shall, in the event which has happened, cease and determine on the 1st of August last, and that the lord chancellor shall make such order as he shall see fit for the administration of such trust estates. It seems to me impossible, upon any construction of the School Act, to contend that these ecclesiastical benefices were not vested in the corporation, in part at least, for the benefit of the school; and if so, they were so vested in part for a charitable use and trust; and if so, they were within the act, and the trusteeship of the corporation has ceased, and the deficiency is to be supplied. If this be so, the 139th section, which provides for the sale of ecclesiastical benefices belonging to the municipal corporations, does not apply to the advowson; for that section, in terms, applies only to advowsons or rights of presentation of which the corporations may be seized or passed, otherwise than as charitable trustees.

"But it is said that, at all events, the the Bristol charities. The master accord- ingly appointed new trustees; and his report was confirmed by the lord chancellor in the month of October, 1836. In this state of things, the question for our decision is, in whom the legal estate in the manor of Con- gresbury, of which the lands in question in this cause are part, is now vested.

"The question depends entirely on the construction to be put on the 71st section of the Municipal Corporation Act, by which it was enacted, among other things, that in every borough in which the body corporate then stood seized of any hereditaments, in trust for any charitable uses, all the estate and interest, and all the powers of such body corporate in respect of such uses, should continue in the persons who, at the time of the passing of the act, were such trustees, until the 1st of August, 1836, and should immediately therefrom utterly cease and determine. Provided that, if parliament should not otherwise direct, on or before the 1st of August, 1836, the lord chancellor should make such orders as he should see fit for the administration, subject to such charitable uses as aforesaid, of such trust estates.

"It has occurred to us as a matter of con- siderable doubt, whether this section applies to the present case, because the municipal body corporate of Bristol did not stand seized of any land. It was a separate corpora- tion, with a distinct name of incorporation and a distinct corporate seal, that was seized of the land in question, though the natural members of the body corporate were the same as those who constituted the municipal corpora- tion. If that doubt were well-founded, the plaintiff is entitled to recover on the de- mise by the Governors of the Hospital of Queen Elizabeth in Bristol. If it be not, and the corporation is treated as the same, and as seized of the land, we still think that the plaintiff is entitled to recover on the same demise. Had it not been for the 71st clause, it is clear that the trust estates in question would have continued in the corpo- ration as before the passing of the act. For though, under the previous sections, the name and style of the corporation, and the mode of electing the members, were changed, yet the identity of the body itself was not affected. (Vide ss. 1 & 6.) The corporation is still the same body which, by the charter of Queen Elizabeth, was incorporated by the name of 'The Governors of the Hospital of Queen Elizabeth in Bristol;' and the real question, therefore, is as to the effect of the 71st section.

"We are of opinion, notwithstanding this clause, that the legal estate remains, and, as fact, always has been vested in the corpora- tion; and that this 71st section affects only the equitable interest, or rather the right of administering the charitable funds. The object of the clause, as appears from its pre- amble, was to keep the administration of the charitable funds distinct from that of the municipal funds; and the question is, what is the true construction of the enactment whereby this object was to be effected? On the part of the defendant, it was contended, that, by the express words of the clause, all the estate of the corporation in the charity property was transferred, for a limited period, to the persons who, at the passing of the act, constituted the corporation; and then that, at the end of such limited period, namely, on the 1st of August, 1836, their estate was made absolutely to cease; the effect of which would probably be to re-vest the legal property in the heirs of the original founder.

"If this be the necessary meaning of the words used by the legislature, it would be our duty to construe the clause accordingly, whatever might be the inconvenience of such a course. But unless it is very clear that we should be doing violence to the language of the act by adopting any other construction, the great inconvenience of that suggested by the defendant may certainly afford fair ground for supposing that it cannot be what was contemplated by the legislature, and may well warrant us in looking for some other interpretation. Now it is to be observed, that what the preamble states as expedient to be done, is not to affect the ownership of charity estates, but only to keep the administration of them distinct from that of the borough fund; and for this purpose it certainly would not be matter of necessity that the legal interest should be affected. The subsequent enactment was assumed in the argument to be, that all the estate and interest of the corporation in the charity lands should be transferred to the individuals who, at the time of the passing of the act, constituted the body corporate, and should so continue until the 1st of August, 1836, and should then cease. This, however, is by no means the necessary meaning of the words used: by reading the words 'all the estate,' &c., and 'all the powers,' &c., as under a vinculum, the whole sentence, i. e., 'the estate,' &c., as well as 'the powers,' &c., will have reference to the latter words, 'in respect of the said uses and trusts;' and the meaning will then be, that the estate and interest in the trust only, and not in the legal estate, shall continue in those in whom it was then vested. The language, it must be admitted, is far from clear, and might, if the context so required, have been taken to transfer the legal estate in the lands affected by the trusts; but we thus see that it may also be taken to refer to the charitable trust only, i. e., the right or duty of administering to the fund; and this, as it appears to have been meant, and is, in construction, presents no difficulty. For a short time of the trusts is left who would, for the previously administered the lapse of a few nagement is made to nancellor. These are provisions plain in themselves, easy to be acted upon, and well calculated to effect all which the preamble states as being expedient. Whereas, on the construction contended for by the defendant, we are driven to impute to the legislature the anomalous intention, first, of vesting the fee-simple in an indefinite, unascertained number of persons, and then, after the lapse of a few months, destroying the interest of those persons, without pointing out what was to become of the fee from that time. No doubt but that, even on that construction, the lord chancellor would have the power of getting in the legal fee, but this could only be done by means of a petition or bill in Chancery, entailing on the charity costs, without, as we can discover, any benefit whatever; and these considerations well warrant us in endeavouring to find some other meaning fairly attributable to the language used.

"It does not appear to us that the case of Bignold v. Springfield, (7 C. & F. 71,) referred to by the defendant, assists him in his view of this case. The only point really in dispute there was, whether the powers given to the lord chancellor came into operation on the 1st of August, 1836. The House of Lords decided that they did; and it will be seen that Chief Justice Tindal, in delivering the opinion of the judges, does not say that any estate ceased or was divested on the 1st of August, 1836, but that the administration of the charity estates, given by the clause in question, ceased on that day: a construction of the clause in strict accordance with our opinion.

"The only further argument of the defendant which it remains to notice, is that which was founded on the Irish Municipal Act, which was passed in the year 1840, (3 & 4 Vict. c. 108.) The 112th section of that act makes provision for charitable trusts similar, or nearly similar, to those in the English act. But in the Irish act, express provision is made as to the legal estate, and the difficulties which had occurred on this subject in the English act are met and obviated. We do not, however, think that any reliance is to be placed on this circumstance. The Irish act did not become law until a year after the decision in Bignold v. Springfield, (Ibid.,) in the House of Lords; and as Chief Justice Tindal had in that case pointed out to the attention of the house, that the clause in the English act was so framed as to give rise to difficulties in its construction, it was very natural, that in making provisions on a similar subject in a subsequent year, the legislature should take care to avoid all ambiguity, and so to word the clause as to prevent the occurrence of those difficulties which the chief justice had alluded to. The Irish act, indeed, goes further than the English, by at once vesting the legal estate in the charity trustees; a provision which is certainly very convenient, but which unfortunately does not exist in the clause now under our consideration. The English act

STAT. 5 & 6 shall be occasioned among the charitable trustees for any borough before the said first day of August, it shall be lawful for the lord high chancellor or lords commissioners of the great seal for the time being, upon petition, in a summary way, to appoint another trustee to supply such vacancy; and every person so appointed a must be construed in the same way as if the Irish act had never passed: and for the reasons we have given, we think that, according to its true construction, the legal estate is, and always has been, where it was at the time of the passing of the act; consequently, that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment on the demise from the corporation."

It was held in Bigbold v. Springfield, (5 Bing. N. C. 745,) that the administrators of the charity estate and funds comprised in and described by the 71st section of Stat. 5 & 6 Gul. 4, c. 76, did not continue after the first of August, 1836, in the persons described in that section. Chief Justice Tindal delivering, in the House of Lords, the following unanimous opinion of the judges: "My lords, in answer to the question proposed by your lordships to her majesty's judges, vis. whether the administration of the charity estates and funds comprised in and described by the 71st section of Stat. 5 & 6 Gul. 4, c. 76, continued after the first of August, 1836, in the persons described in the said 71st section, no subsequent act having passed respecting the same before the first of August, 1836, and no vacancy having been occasioned amongst such persons before that time; I have the honour of stating our opinion to be, that the administration of the charity estates and funds referred to in the question did not continue after the first of August, 1836, in the persons described in the 71st section of the act. It was admitted by the counsel for the appellants, in the course of the argument, and very properly admitted, that it is impossible to put any construction on the whole of the clause, without meeting with much difficulty. But we think ourselves bound to put that interpretation upon it which, taking the whole of it together, appears to do the least violence to the words employed in it, and at the same time to give a consistent meaning to every part of the section. And, keeping this object in view, we think the words in the 71st section, that the powers of the former trustees shall continue 'until the first day of August, 1836, or until parliament shall otherwise order, and shall immediately thereupon utterly cease and determine,' are to be construed as if the words had been, until the first of August, 1836, or until parliament shall 'in the meantime' or 'sooner' otherwise order, and that the words 'shall immediately thereupon utterly cease and determine,' intend that, if parliament did not in the meantime otherwise order, the powers should cease and determine on the first of August; and if parliament did in the meantime otherwise order, that then they should cease and determine upon the day which should be appointed and substituted by the legislature instead of the first of August. And we feel ourselves warranted in giving this construction to the earlier part of the clause, by the consideration that the last proviso in the same clause contains an enactment relating to the same subject-matter of legislation, and which is free from all ambiguity whatever, vis. 'Provided also, that if parliament shall not otherwise direct before the said first day of August, 1836, the lord chancellor shall make such orders as he shall see fit for the administration of such estates.' And we cannot understand the legislature to have had in its view an alteration by parliament, unlimited in point of time in the former part, but limited in point of time to the first of August in the latter part of the same section. My lords, the construction contended for on the part of the appellants is further liable to this objection, that it leaves the time at which the powers of the former trustees are to cease and determine, altogether undefined and uncertain. There might happen, according to that construction, an interval of time of unlimited extent before parliament might think fit 'to interfere and otherwise order,' and in the meantime, it is obvious, all would be involved in doubt and uncertainty. And again, there is, as it appears to us, a very strong objection against the reading 'and' instead of 'or,' as contended for on the part of the appellants, that is, against reading the act thus, 'until the first day of August, 1836, and until parliament shall otherwise order,' for this would imply that parliament could have no power to make such an order until after the first of August had passed: a construction not only inconsistent with the general authority of parliament, but irreconcilable with the proviso above referred to, which expressly refers to an alteration to be made before the first of August. Upon the whole, we think that the administration of the charity estates and funds did not continue in the persons described in the 71st section after the first of August."

On the fifth of August the petition and appeal were dismissed, the order confirmed, with costs to respondents in respect of the appeal.

Appointment of Trustees. In re Ludlow Charities, (3 M. & C. 262,) it was held that, in the appointment of trustees of property held by a corporation upon charitable trusts previously to the enactment of the Municipal Corporation Act, persons who are members under such statute are not ineligible as trustees, although the corporation may have formerly set up a claim to the property in opposition to the charity.

A person's name had been submitted to the master as a new trustee, and he had been approved by the master, but without any affidavit of his respectability. Such an affidavit was afterwards produced to the lord chancellor, and no objection to his respectability was made: it was held, that there was no ground for referring the question of his appointment back to the master.

trustee as last aforesaid shall be a trustee until the time at which the person in the room of whom he was chosen would regularly have ceased to be a trustee, and he shall then cease to be a trustee: provided also, that if parliament shall not otherwise direct, on or before the said first day of August, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, the lord high chancellor or lords commissioners of the great seal shall make such orders as he or they shall see fit for the administration, subject to such charitable uses or trusts as aforesaid, of such trust estates.

"LXXII. And be it enacted, that the body corporate named in the said schedules (A) and (B), in conjunction with any borough, shall be trustees for executing by the council of such borough the powers and provisions of all acts of parliament made before the passing of this act, (other than acts made for securing charitable uses and trusts,) and of all trusts, (other than charitable uses and trusts,) of which the said body corporate, or any of the members thereof in their corporate capacity, was or were sole trustees before the time of the first election of councillors in such borough under this act.

"LXXIII. And be it enacted, that in every borough in which the body corporate, or a particular or limited number, class, or description of members of the body corporate, or of persons appointed by the body corporate, was or were before the passing of this act trustees jointly with other trustees for the execution of any act of parliament, or of any trust, or in which the body corporate, or any particular or limited number, class, or description of members or nominees of the body corporate, by any statute, charter, bye-law, or custom, was or were before the passing of this act lawfully appointed to or exercised any powers, duties, or functions whatsoever, not otherwise herein provided for, and the continuance of which is not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, the council of such borough, on the day named in such act as last aforesaid, or in the deed or will by which such trust is created for a new election, nomination, or appointment of trustees, or on which such new election, nomination, or appointment has usually been made, (and if there shall be no such day named or usually observed, then on the first day of January in every year,) shall appoint the like number of members of the council, or as near as may be to the like number of members of the council, as there were theretofore members or nominees of such corporate body who in right of their office were such trustees, or charged with the execution of such powers, duties, and functions, in room of the members or nominees of such corporate body ceasing to be trustees, or ceasing to exercise such powers, duties, and functions, by virtue of this act, and in every case of extraordinary vacancy among the trustees or persons so appointed by the council shall forthwith appoint one other member of the council in the room of the person by whom such vacancy has been made, and to hold his trust or office for such time as the person by whom such vacancy has been made, would regularly have held it.

"LXXIV. And be it enacted, that notwithstanding anything in this act contained, every member of any body corporate who in his corporate capacity, and every nominee of any body corporate, or any particular number, class, or description of members of such body corporate, who at the time of the passing of this act shall be for a definite number of years or other shorter time a trustee of such acts or trusts as last aforesaid, shall continue to be such trustee until the time when he would have ceased to be such trustee if this act had not passed; and if a trustee for an indefinite time, or for life, or for so long as he shall be a member, or of a particular class or description of such body corporate, then until the first day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, and no longer; and every member of the council appointed under the provisions of this act to be a trustee of such acts or trusts as last aforesaid shall continue to be such trustee until the time herein provided for the new appointment of a member of the council to be trustee in his room, notwithstanding that he may have ceased to be a member of the council; and in case any particular member or officer of any of the said bodies corporate shall have been appointed by any such act, or by any such trust deed or will as last aforesaid, ing a definite number of years or other shorter time any specific or functions whatsoever, the person who at the time of the passing shall be the person designated and qualified to perform the same to perform the same until the time when he would have ceased same if this act had not passed; and if appointed for an indefinite life, or for so long as he shall be a member, or of a particular institution of such body corporate, then until the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, and no longer: provided that nothing in this act shall be construed to extend to the body of trustees of the Liverpool Docks, but that every person who at the passing of this act shall be a trustee of the Liverpool Docks, shall be continued to be such trustee until the first day of the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, and no longer; and every trustee who is appointed to discharge, or in his corporate capacity powers, duties, or functions whatsoever in respect of the said trust estate, and none other, shall continue to discharge the same until the act had not passed, until the first day of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty six, and no longer.

Provided always, and be it enacted, that nothing contained in this act shall affect certain letters patent bearing date in the fifth year of the late King Edward the Sixth, founding a free grammar-school at county of Lincoln, and creating a body corporate for the management thereof, and for the benefit of twelve poor persons mentioned in the said patent, by the name of the 'Warden and six Assistants of the said free school of King Edward the Sixth in Louth;' but that the said assistants shall continue and be a body corporate with perpetual succession, for the execution of the provisions of the said letters patent, for the management and government of the said school and the purposes aforesaid only, and shall remain and continue so until the said lands, tolls, tenements, and hereditaments now vested in the said assistants shall be sold, and the proceeds thereof applied to the purposes therein mentioned, in the same manner to all intents and purposes as if the said act had not been passed.

II. And be it enacted, that all the jurisdictions and authorities now exercised over the precinct or close of any cathedral shall be continued, as they have not been passed, concurrently with the jurisdiction and authority of the bishop of the diocese of the borough within which such close is situated; and no charter or act of parliament shall affect or interfere with the rights and privileges of any cathedral or of the bishop of the diocese of the borough within which such cathedral is situated.

. And be it enacted, that in every case in which any body corporate, class, number, or description of members, or the governing body corporate, now is or are in their corporate capacity, and not as trustees, according to the meaning and provisions of this act, seized or possessed, or in possession, or in receipt of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments wherunto any advowson or presentation (1) to any benefice or ecclesiastical preferment or appurtenant, or of any advowson in gross, or hath or have leave to nominate or present to any benefice or ecclesiastical preferment, or of any advowson, and every such right of nomination and presentation, shall and lawfully may, at any time or times, and in such manner as the commissioners appointed by the said act shall think fit, consider the state of the established church in England and Wales, and the ecclesiastical duties and revenues may direct, so that the best advantage may be made of the same; and it shall be lawful for the council of such diocese, or of such university, or of such college, or of such school, and they are hereby authorized and required, with the consent of and preachers of the word, and other officers, in the churches aforesaid necessary, at all times to come—the king granted to them and their successors the whole and entire rectories and vicarages of Bury St. Edmunds, and of the aforesaid parish churches, and the advowsons and donations, free dispositions, and rights of patronage of the same churches, and all manner of tithes, &c.

The corporation made no endowment, and gave no fixed stipend to the ministers of either of the said churches, but subsequently to the year 1687 appointed two clergymen to each church, the one called a preacher or lecturer, and the other a curate or reader, the former being paid by a salary from the corporation, varying from 100*l.* to 80*l.* a year; and the latter, since the year 1712, deriving his only remuneration from the surplice fees and Easter offerings.

The office of curate or reader of the parish of St. James having become vacant before any sale had been effected by the corporation: it was held, that it was unnecessary to consider whether the right of presentation or nomination to that office was within Stat. 5 & 6 Gul. 4, c. 76, s. 139, inasmuch as it clearly fell within the provisions of Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 31; and that the necessary consequence of holding it to be within the latter statute, was to bring it within the proviso of the 139th section of the former act; and consequently, that such right of presentation or nomination vested in the bishop of the diocese; Chief Justice Tindal delivering the judgment of the court in the following language: "The question which is stated for our opinion at the end of this special case, is, whether the right of nominating and appointing a clergyman to the office of curate or reader of the parish of St. James, in Bury St. Edmunds, was, upon the death of the late curate or reader, vested in the Bishop of Ely, as bishop. And the determination of this question appears to us, to depend upon the consideration of two points; viz. First, whether, considering the nature and description of the right of the corporation as set out in the case, such right to nominate and appoint, falls within the 139th section of Stat. 5 & 6 Gul. 4, c. 76, or within Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 31. For, if this right falls within the former act, there can be no doubt, that the proviso for the interim appointment will govern the present case: but if, on the other hand, this right of nomination and appointment is not comprehended within the former act, but falls within the provisions of the latter, then arises the second question, whether the proviso contained in the 139th section of Stat. 5 & 6 Gul. 4, upon which alone the right of supplying the vacancy by the presentation or nomination of the bishop of

"That it was the intention of the legislature to take from municipal corporations, when established upon their new system, all ecclesiastical patronage of every kind and description, and to vest the same in the purchasers thereof, appears to be beyond a doubt. The general and comprehensive terms used in the former act, the passing of the second act in order to facilitate the sale of church patronage, which recites the doubt as to the church patronage therein described, and the terms in which such doubt is thereby removed; the entire absence of any supportable ground of distinction between one species of ecclesiastical patronage and another, in respect that some should be taken from them and others left; these circumstances all combine to prove the intention of the legislature to have been, the general removal of all ecclesiastical patronage from the hands of municipal corporations; and certainly the particular character and description of the patronage now under consideration, as claimed on the part of the corporation, assuming it to be correctly claimed, namely, the right of nominating a curate or reader, for a period as short and limited as they may think fit, with the power to remove him at their own pleasure, would not entitle it to any particular favour, as an exception from the general operation of the statutes.

"But the question, whether the right of patronage claimed and exercised by the corporation of Bury St. Edmunds, does or does not fall within the operation of Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 31, will best appear by comparing the description of the patronage contained in that act, with the facts stated in the case. The act recites, 'that in some instances, the manors, &c. whereof some municipal corporations are seised, were granted to them with an obligation to nominate, provide, and sustain, in certain churches and chapels, able and fit priests, curates, preachers, or ministers, for the performance and administration of ecclesiastical duties and rites therein, and for the cure of the souls of the parishioners and inhabitants; and although such corporations have from time to time duly nominated and provided such priests, curates, preachers, or ministers, and paid stipends for their sustenance, and have either provided houses for their residence, or paid allowances in lieu thereof, yet such stipends or allowances have not been fixed or assured by any competent authority; and for want of any regular endowment or augmentation of any such curacies, they have not been perpetual cures, or benefices presentative, and the curates have not become bodies politic and corporate within the meaning of Stat. 1 Geo. I, c. 10, or Stat. 36 Geo. 3, c. 3; by reason whereof doubts have arisen, whether the right of nominating ministers to such churches and chapelries can be sold under the provisions of the recited act.' Now

, we are of opinion that the right of nomination or nomination falls within the 1 & 2 Vict. c.

6 or such right of nomination or presentation as aforesaid to the purchaser or pur-
76. chasers thereof respectively, his or their heirs, executors, administrators, and upon reference to the facts stated in the case, the right claimed and exercised by the corporation of Bury St. Edmunds appears to agree so closely with the recital of the act, that it might almost be supposed that the legislature had shaped the remedy with an express view to this particular case. For by the grant to the corporation of 6th James the First, the aldermen and burgesses agreed to pay 8l. 10s. out of the tithes thereby granted to them, yearly, to the use of the curates and ministers of the two parish churches of Bury St. Edmunds: and by the second grant of the 12th James the First, the king, after stating his expectation, that the aldermen and burgesses of Bury St. Edmunds would provide able and fit ministers and preachers of the word, and other officers of the churches aforesaid necessary, at all times to come, granted to the aldermen and burgesses, and their successors, the whole and entire rectories and vicarages of Bury St. Edmunds, and the said parish churches of St. Mary and St. James, and all rights and patronage of the same: and all the tithes, both greater and less, and all other rights to the same belonging, to be held by them as freely and fully as the late abbot of the said monastery then lately dissolved, or any of his predecessors, had held the same. Now, under these grants, which were accepted by the corporation, there can be no doubt but that the corporation were bound to make a sufficient provision for the cure of the parish in question, and that they had the nomination and appointment of the person or persons who should perform the duty; nor is there any doubt, that if they had appointed a person to such cure with a fixed stipend, and irremovable at their own pleasure, he would have been a perpetual curate in the strict legal sense of the word.

"It appears, however, from the statement in the case, that they did not make any endowment, or give any fixed stipend to the ministers in either of the churches; nor did they, so far as appears in the case, for a considerable period subsequent to the grants of King James, appoint any one particular person to the cure of either of the churches; but from the year 1652, (the records previous to which year are lost,) down to the year 1687, the aldermen and burgesses from time to time appointed and provided the ministers necessary; during some part of that time, procuring, as they were best able, from Sunday to Sunday, clergymen from Cambridge or elsewhere, and paying them for such their services. So that the corporation, during that early period, appear to have acted precisely in the same manner as the monastery itself before the dissolution had done, except that the corporation procured ministers from other quarters instead of furnishing them out of their own body. Instances of which mode of nomination were probably not unfrequent at an early period after the dissolution of monasteries, as would appear from the case of Corr v. Pinney,

(3 Lev. 82,) where a covenant is set out in a lease by the Dean of Lincoln, of a certain rectory to the defendant, who covenants with the dean, 'that he would find or provide a sufficient minister or priest to serve in the church, such as the dean and his successors should allow and approve, and would pay the said priest forty marks per annum.' So that the person or persons provided by the corporation to officiate in the cure of the parish at that time, appears to have been removable or changeable at their will, just as the monk sent to officiate by the monastery, was in some instances removable 'ad nutum prioris' as appears in the case of Burton v. Wade, (Cro. Jac. 516.) And supposing such right of the corporation to appoint or present continued to be the same up to the time of the Municipal Corporation Act, (which the counsel for the defendant contends to have been the case,) that is, if there was no fixed stipend payable by the corporation, and the corporation had the power to appoint and remove, the case would fall precisely within the words of the preamble of the statute of Victoria,—that tithes were granted to the corporation, with an obligation to nominate able and sufficient ministers; that ministers were nominated and provided by the corporation, and stipends paid by them; but the stipends not having been fixed or allowed by competent authority, and for want of regular endowment or augmentation, the curacies have not become perpetual curacies; and the present case, therefore, would be precisely that which the statute intended to provide for.

"Two objections have been urged on the behalf of the corporation, against the application of the statute to the case before us. In the first place, it is said there was nothing which could be the subject-matter of a sale within the intention of these acts; for there was no certain duration of incumbency in the cure, this appointment being entirely at the will of the corporation, who might displace one curate or reader and appoint another as they pleased. Admitting this power of action to have existed in the corporation, for the purpose of argument, but not conceding it to be a fact in this case, when it appears that the curates have been regularly licensed by the bishop, the effect of which license it is now unnecessary to enter into; admitting it, however, to exist, still it is difficult to find the force of the objection. For the corporation are only required by the act to sell such right of nomination or presentation as they actually possess, without any reference to the period for which the nomination or presentation is given. If their right is, to present a curate who holds for life, they sell a power of presentation for life; if, a curate who is removable at will, such will be the presentation that is put to sale.

"It is objected, in the second place, that the right of nomination exercised by the corporation in respect of the parish church of St. James, is not a nomination of one in-assigns, or to such uses as he or they shall direct; and the proceeds of every such sale shall be paid to the treasurer of the borough, whose receipt shall be a sufficient and effectual discharge to the purchaser or purchasers to whom the same shall be given for the amount of his or their purchase money, and shall be by him invested in government securities for the use of the body corporate, and the annual interest payable thereon shall be carried to the account of the borough fund; provided always, that in any case of vacancy arising before any such sale shall have taken place and been completed such vacancy shall be supplied by the presentation or ordinary of the diocese in which such benefice or situation is situated."

erefore, now g within that thin the pro- s former statute, so as to give the bishop of the diocese the power of appointing to a vacancy before the sale. And we think the necessary consequence of holding it within the statute of Victoria is to bring it within the 139th section of the Municipal Corporation Act. And we consider the case of the same, as if the descriptive words of the later statute of Victoria had been actually inserted in the 139th section of the former act, and had formed part of that section. The doubt expressed in the recital of the statute of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 31, is, whether such rights of nomination as are therein described, could be sold under the provisions of the 139th section, one of which very provisions is, the power of interim appointment given to the bishop of the diocese. And when it is argued that, by the express words of the statute of Victoria, the curacy does not become a benefice until after the sale, and that this appointment takes place before, it may be answered that the power of appointment in the 139th section is not limited to the case of benefices, but is extended also to the ecclesiastical preferments mentioned in that clause; and that the right of nomination to this curacy is, upon the argument, to be considered as virtually introduced into the clause itself by the latter statute.

"For the reasons above given, we think that the right of appointment to the office of curate or reader of the parish church of St. James, in Bury St. Edmunds, became vested in the Bishop of Ely upon the death of the late curate; and that judgment, reluctant certification, must, therefore, be entered for the plaintiff for the damages agreed upon between the parties."

ion, prebendary, spiritual person, master, or guardian shall grant of renewal of the same or otherwise, for any life or lives; any to the contrary notwithstanding.

further enacted, that whenever any archbishop, bishop, ecclesiastical sole or aggregate, dignitary, canon, prebendary, spiritual person, or guardian, shall hereafter grant any renewed lease of any house, or hereditaments, parcel of the possessions of his or their see, canonry, prebend, benefice, or hospital, such lease shall contain, in the case of a lease for lives, setting forth the names of the persons named as cestuique vie in the then last preceding lease of the same premises, and which of such persons, if any, is or are then dead, or for whom some other person has been exchanged by virtue of the provision made, and in case of a lease for years setting forth for what term of years the lease of the same premises was granted, and how much of the term has expired, and how much remains to come and unexpired, every such lease shall, so far as relates to the validity of the lease so to be made, be deemed and taken to be conclusive evidence of the truth of the same as recited or stated.

it further enacted, that if any person shall execute any such lease or counterpart thereof, knowing such recital or statement, or any part thereof, to be false, or shall wilfully introduce or cause to be introduced, or aid or abet, or shall wilfully introduce or cause to be introduced, or aid or abet, any such recital or statement into any such lease, knowing the same to be false, or shall prepare or engross, or cause to be prepared, any lease or counterpart of a lease containing any such false recital as aforesaid, knowing the same or any part thereof to be false, every such person shall be deemed and taken to be guilty of a misdemeanor; and every such person offending shall, in addition to any punishment to which he or she may be liable by law, be liable to pay to any person suing for the same the full sum of five pounds, at the option of such person, five years' improved annual value of the premises comprised in such lease.

nevertheless, and be it enacted, that in cases where it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the court, that in any case where it shall be hereinafter mentioned, that for ten years now last past it hath been the usual practice (such practice having in the case of a corporation subsisting at the time of the person for the time being representing such corporation) to grant such leases for forty, thirty, or twenty-one years respectively, periods longer than fourteen, ten, or seven years respectively, nothing shall prevent any archbishop, bishop, ecclesiastical corporation, dignitary, canon, prebendary, spiritual person, master, or guardian, from granting a renewed lease conformably to such usual practice; provided that a certificate shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the archbishop in the case of a lease granted by such archbishop or by a corporation, and in the case of a lease granted by any other corporation or person to the archbishop and also of the bishop having jurisdiction over such person, and shall before the granting of such lease be certified in writing in the hand of the archbishop in the one case, and of the archbishop or bishop in the other case; the certificate so signed by an archbishop only to be deposited in the registry of such archbishop, and the certificate so signed and also by a bishop to be afterwards deposited in the registry of such bishop; such certificate shall be conclusive evidence of the facts thereby also, and be it enacted, that nothing herein contained shall prevent any archbishop, bishop, ecclesiastical corporation sole or aggregate, dignitary, canon, prebendary, spiritual person, master, or guardian, from exchanging any life or lives for which any lease shall have been granted as aforesaid, and from granting any renewed lease with a view to effectuate such exchange; provided that the same shall be approved of (in the case of an archbishop) by the archbishop in council, or (in the case of a bishop) by the bishop in council, or (in the case of any inferior corporation or person) by “VI. Provided also, and be it enacted, that nothing in this act contained shall prevent any grants or renewals of leases which may have been authorized by acts of parliament specially relating to the particular estates demised by such leases.

“VII. Provided also, and be it enacted, that nothing in this act contained shall prevent a lease from being granted, with a view to confirm any title or otherwise, for the life or lives of the same person or persons or for the lives or life of the survivors or survivor of them, or for the same term of years, and commencing at the same period, as the lease last granted for a life or lives or a term of years respectively.

“VIII. Provided also, and be it enacted, that no lease not authorized by the laws and statutes now in force shall be rendered valid by anything in this act contained.

by the minister of the parish, but it does not appear to be essentially necessary, for a terrier signed only by the churchwardens, was admitted in evidence in favour of a vicar against an impropriator. Stillingfleet v. Leigh, Gwillim, 1615. 3 E. & Y. 1385. A terrier, though not signed by the impropriate rector, nor by any person for him, is evidence against him as to tithes due to him in the parish. Potts v. Durant, 3 Inst. 789. 2 E. & Y. 432. Where terriers state the rector to be entitled to the small tithes of the parish, the expression is so general and indefinite, as not to exclude the possibility of the existence of money payments in lieu of the small tithes; and, therefore, where terriers so stated, but the parson has proved money payments, for nearly a century back, in lieu of certain small tithes, a decree for tithes in kind of these tithes was refused, and the rector was left to his issue, or action at law. *Lonsdale v. have, for the most part, been made by lay impropriators of personages since the diso-lution of monasteries in the reign of Henry the Eighth. Parcels of tithes are very numerous in some parts of the kingdom, and as each parcel is for the purposes of the commutation to be considered as a separate parish they will very much increase the labours of the commissioners. It would seem, however, that the lands over which such portions and parcels extend, cannot be the subject of separate commutation, except in those cases in which the portion or parcel comprises all the tithes of the land. But such cases are extremely rare. Parcels of tithes consist of rectorial tithes, and the vicar is commonly entitled to some of the tithes arising on the same land, and it could scarcely have been intended that, in such cases, the same lands should be considered as a separate district, in respect to the parcel of tithes, and united with the rest of the parish, in respect of the vicarial tithes. Ibid. 12.

Parochial meetings may be called, at which owners of two thirds in value may agree on the sum to be paid to the titheowners, which agreement shall bind the whole parish.

(1) In the sixth and seventh years.—A statute passed in a session of parliament begun in the second and continued in the third year of a king's reign, must not be pleaded as passed in the second and third years of the reign; although such act be recited in a later statute as "passed in the second and third years," See. Row v. Biers, 1 A. & E. 327.

(2) Value.—The value of the land and tithes is to be estimated according to the assessment for the relief of the poor, and in extra-parochial places in which there is no poor's rate, upon a valuation according to the principle of such assessments. Vide Stat. 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 71, s. 19.

(5) Small tithes.—"Two-thirds of the great tithes and two-thirds of the small tithes," See. This provision which makes the separate and distinct concurrence of the owners of two-thirds of the great tithes, and two-thirds of the small tithes, essential to the execution of a parochial agreement, seems intended for the protection of vicars, whose interests in the tithes of the whole parish collectively, bear almost universally, but a very small proportion to those of the impropriate or appropriators rectors, and might, therefore, be very materially prejudiced by agreements made without their assent. But as the language of the provision appears to have been framed upon the notion, that the words "great tithes" are synonymous with "rectorial tithes," and the words "small tithes" with "vicarial tithes," it is necessary to observe, that the division of tithes into great and small is merely a general legal distinction, and the terms "great" and "small" have no necessary or permanent connexion with rectorial and vicarial tithes. Vicars, it is true, are very commonly entitled to all the small tithes of the parish, but that is an ac-

some schedule thereunto annexed shall set forth all the lands of the said parish which are subject to the payment of any kind of tithes, and also the true or estimated quantity in statute measure of land subject to tithes within the parish which shall be then cultivated as arable, meadow, or pasture land, or as wood land, common land, or howsoever otherwise, and shall also set forth whether any modus or composition real, or prescriptive or customary payment, shall be payable instead of all or any of the tithes of the said parish, and which lands or tithes respectively are covered thereby, and shall also set forth which of the said tithes, moduses, compositions, or payments are payable to the titheowner, or if there is more than one titheowner to each of the several titheowners in the said parish, distinguishing in what right every such titheowner is entitled to such tithes, and shall also set forth whether any and which of the lands of the said parish are or have been under any and what circumstances exempt from the payment of any and what tithes; and such agreement shall also state in words at length the amount of the sum or sums agreed to be paid (subject to variation as hereinafter provided) instead of the tithes of the lands comprised in the said agreement, and instead of all moduses and compositions real, prescriptive and customary payments, (if any,) payable in respect of such lands, or the produce of such lands or any of them, distinguishing, if there is more than one titheowner, the sum payable to every such titheowner, and where the tithes of different lands in the same parish are payable to different titheowners, or to the same titheowner in different rights, distinguishing the sum payable in respect of such different lands; and every such agreement shall also state all such other particulars as the commissioners shall by any order from time to time require to be inserted in such agreements.

"XXII. And be it enacted, that the commissioners shall frame and cause to be printed, as soon as conveniently may be after their appointment, forms of notices and agreements, and such other instruments as in their judgment will further the purposes of this act, and supply all or any of such forms to the churchwardens and overseers of any parish who may require the same, or to whom the commissioners may think fit to send the same, for the use of any landowner or titheowner desirous of putting this act in execution.

By Stat. 2 & 3 Gul. 4, c. 80, dignitaries of the church and ecclesiastical and collegiate corporations are enabled to enter into any agreement or deed of submission with their

the lands or produce thereof in the said parish, the commissioners or assistant commissioner shall in such case estimate the amount of such modus, composition, or payment as the value of the tithes payable in respect of such lands or produce respectively, and shall add the amount thereof to the value of the other tithes of the parish ascertained as aforesaid, and shall also make due allowance for all exemptions from or non-liability to tithes of any lands or any part of the produce of such lands: provided also, that if it shall appear to the said commissioners or assistant commissioner that any question concerning any modus or composition real, prescriptive or customary payment, or claim of exemption from or non-liability to the payment of tithes relating to the lands in question, shall have been decided by competent authority before the making of the said award, the commissioners or assistant commissioners shall act on the principle established by such decision, and shall make their award as if such decision had been made at the beginning of the said period of seven years.

There was no evidence that any small tithes were ever paid to or claimed by the rector, or the persons entitled to the rectory: it was held, that the defendants, after failing to shew title to the small tithes in themselves or the owners of the lands, could not be heard to say, that the small payments in the name of privy tithes were compositions; and that privy tithes are not personal tithes, but are the same as small tithes. Clee v. Hall, 7 C. & F. 744. It was likewise held, that where there is evidence, that the vicarage was endowed with small tithes, the vicar's right to them is established against all lands within the parish as to which no particular discharge is proved; although no small tithes have ever been paid. Ibid.

Respecting the costs, it was decided, that where any of the defendants proved a particular discharge of the lands in his occupation, or shewed they were originally part of the glebe lands, the vicar's bill against them was dismissed with costs, but without costs as to such defendants as did not make and prove that defence in the court below. Ibid.

In Shoobridge v. Ward, (4 Scott's N. R. 579.) it appeared, that the titheable lands in the parish of Tenterden consisted of three different descriptions, viz., uplands, townlands, and marshlands, the occupiers of which owed upon an immemorial modus or customary payment of 4d. an acre in lieu of vicaral tithes in respect of the uplands, of 6d. an acre in respect of the townlands, and of 8d. an acre in respect of the marshlands. An award made by an assistant tithe commissioner under Stat. 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 71, found the alleged modus as to the marshlands, but disaffirmed it as to the uplands and townlands, there being no certain or defined boundary line separating the uplands from the townlands. An issue was thereupon directed, under sect. 45, wherein the question was, "whether from the time whereof, &c., there had been and was within the parish a certain known portion of the said parish consisting of lands called uplands, and whether, from time whereof, &c., there was not paid and payable by the occupiers the district modus or customary payment of 4d. for every acre of such lands occupied by such occupiers," and a similar issue (in another cause) as to the townlands, the modus as to the marshlands not being disputed. At the trial it appeared that there was a natural boundary between the marshlands and the rest of the parish; and with respect to the uplands and townlands, the plaintiff proved that there were lands in the parish which had been immemorially known as such, and had always paid the acreages of 4d. and 6d. respectively, and that the lands occupied by him were within the district or division known as uplands; but he failed to establish a precise boundary line separating the townlands from the uplands; whereupon the judge told the jury, that, in the absence of proof of a defined boundary between the uplands and townlands, there was no evidence to shew that there was a certain known portion of the parish consisting of lands called uplands: it was held, that this was not a proper direction.

To a bill for the tithes of hay within a certain parish, it was averred by the answer, that there is within the said parish a piece of land called D., and that by a good and laudable custom, observed within the said parish, from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, the said piece of land called D. hath been, and is, and of right ought to be, enjoyed by the impropriate rector of the said parish, or other owner for the time being of the tithes of hay of certain lands within the said parish, in lieu and full satisfaction of and for the tithes of hay of such last mentioned lands: it was held, that this modus was well pleaded as a custom within the parish, and that the expression "or other owner" did not render it bad for uncertainty. Oliver (Clerk) v. Latham, 1 Y. & C. 243.

(1) If any suit shall be pending:—Under Stat. 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 71, s. 45, the commissioners, if they intend to determine any suit "heretofore pending," must give specific notice of their intention to that effect, the ordinary notice to commute being insufficient for that purpose. But there is no doubt as to the jurisdiction of the commissioners to determine such suits, though the jurisdiction is discretionary. Wetherell v. Weighill, 3 Ibid. 243.

The tithe commissioners have no jurisdiction to interfere with suits for tithes which were pending in the court of Exchequer when the Stat. 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 71, was passed. Girdlestone v. Stanley, Ibid. 421.

LIELMI IV. A.D. 1890—1897.

And be it enacted, that any person claiming to be entitled to any tithes thereof, who shall be dissatisfied with any award or assistant commissioner (2), may, if the yearly

The object of the legislature, when they passed this statute, was to give the commissioners power to determine all questions relative to moduses and other similar matters, so as to prevent all litigation after an award should once be made. Now, as at the common law, it is competent to a party to put forth different claims in succession, so under this statute, until the door of all litigation is shut by the award, the party interested ought to be allowed to set up any second claim he may think himself entitled to set up, after having been defeated by evidence or otherwise on the first, and it would require strong language to convince us, that he is precluded from so doing. There is nothing in the 45th or any other section of the act to lead to any other conclusion. The concluding words of the 45th section are indeed relied on for this purpose, by which it is said that 'the decision of the commissioners shall be final and conclusive;' but it is plain these words cannot mean the particular matters in question — that the decision of the commissioners shall be conclusive upon them, and cannot further be construed to prevent other questions being raised. If a party abuses this privilege, he will suffer by being mulcted in the costs, but even if he were not, it would not be a sufficient ground to shake the jurisdiction of the commissioners. the action being an appeal from the decision of the assistant commissioner, no matter, not in issue before the assistant commissioner, can be insisted upon on the action. It seems, therefore, necessary to state, that such an action, although the nature of an appeal, differs very materially from an appeal (properly so called) from an inferior court of record to a superior court, where the cause is re-heard, judgment or decree in the court below is reversed by the court above. In the case of an appeal from a decree of a court of equity to the House of Lords, the decree and other proceedings of the court below are matters of record, and are within the judicial cognizance of the House of Lords, which adjudicates solely upon the merits of the cause as it appears in issue in the inferior court, and permits no new matter to be introduced which was not in issue in the inferior court.

But it is otherwise in the case of an action brought under the provisions of this Act by a party dissatisfied with the decision of an assistant commissioner. Not to mention other reasons, the decision of an assistant commissioner, and the proceedings before him, are not matters of record, and cannot be brought under the judicial notice of a court of law; and, upon the whole, it is clear that the parties to the action are at liberty to introduce new matters, and insist upon points which were not in issue before the assistant commissioner. See the Tithe Acts, § 3.

Where, on a hearing before the assistant commissioner appointed to assess the amount of a commutation rent-charge under Stat. 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 71, a landowner denied the right of B., an alleged titheowner, to rectorial tithe of his lands, asserting that they were tithe free; and the assistant commissioner decided, that B. was owner of the rectorial tithe, and, as rector, entitled to the payment of the same: it was held, that on a writ of certiorari under Stat. 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 71, s. 1, the landowner could not deny, that the lands were subject to the payment of the same to B., for the purpose of raising the question of title as between B. and a third party. Lord Denman observing, "I am of opinion that the plaintiff cannot raise the question in this form, and that such a mode of proceeding was never intended by the Legislature. The observation of Mr. Paget is very striking, that the right of the landowner to be different according to the circumstances under which the titheowner claims; and his right to protect himself by the Tithe Acts, (2 & 3 Gul. 4, c. 100, and 3 & 4, c. 27,) may depend upon these, and be open to the landowner to avail himself issue at the sittings after the term or at the assizes then next or next but one after such action shall have been commenced to be holden for the county within which such lands or the greater part thereof are situated, with liberty nevertheless for the court in which the same shall have been commenced or any judge of his majesty's courts of law at Westminster to extend the time for going to trial therein, or to direct the trial to be in another county if it shall seem fit to such court or judge so to do; and every defendant in any such action shall enter an appearance thereto, and accept such issue; but in case the parties shall differ as to the form of such issue, or in case the defendant shall fail to enter such appearance or accept such issue, then the same shall be settled under the direction of the court in which the action shall be brought, or by any judge of his majesty's courts of law at Westminster, and the plaintiff may proceed thereon in like manner as if the defendant had appeared and accepted such issue; and the parties in such action shall produce to each other and their respective attorneys or counsel at such time and place as any judge may order before trial, and also to the court and jury upon the trial of any such issue, all books, deeds, papers, and writings, terriers, maps, plans, and surveys(1) relating to the matters in issue in their respective custody or power; advantage of this kind by showing the truth of the case on trial of the issue. The only question here is, on whom the burden of proof ought to lie; and I think it must be on the landowner. The ownership of the title must, in the first instance, be taken to be with him who is in a situation to claim it; and, if the landowner disputes that right, he must shew, that the party claiming is disentitled." Edwards v. Benbury, 3 Q. B. 887.

On a bill filed by a perpetual curate against occupiers for the tithes of hay and certain small tithes, it appeared probable from the evidence that, previous to the year 1715, the curate only received the tithes by permission of the lay impropriator; but, it was proved, since that period he had, to a certain extent, received tithes, or a compensation for tithes, and that no tithes of any description had ever been demanded by, or paid to the impropriator: it was held, that the curate's title to tithes was established, but issues were directed to try the existence of certain moduses, set up by the defendants. Oliver (Clerk) v. Lifford, 1 Y. & C. N. C. 243.

An award was made by an assistant tithe commissioner under Stat. 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 71, with respect to certain alleged district moduses. Both the vicar and the landowners of the parish being dissatisfied with the award, the vicar brought an action against one of the landowners, and seventy-four of the landowners brought actions against the vicar, in order to try the disputed right, under issues to be directed pursuant to the 46th section of the statute: but the court refused to order the seventy-four actions brought by the landowners against the vicar, to abide the event of the action brought by him. Ward (Clerk) v. Pomfret, 1 M. & G. 559.

(3) Proceed to a trial.—A feigned issue under Stat. 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 71, s. 46, is not within the same rules of practice as actions at law, and therefore, when the plaintiff fails to proceed promptly to trial, on such an issue, the defendant cannot obtain judgment as in case of a nonsuit; but must make the delay of the plaintiff the subject of a special application to the court. Wick v. Cotton, 3 D. & D. P. C. 227.

(1) Shall produce . . . all books, deeds, papers, and writings, terriers, maps, plans, and surveys.—In order to render a document admissible in evidence, it is not necessary that it should come from the most proper place of custody; it is sufficient if it come from a place where it may reasonably be expected to be found. On the trial of a feigned issue, under Stat. 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 71, s. 46, between the vicar of M., and the owners of the lands within the township of E. K., within the parish of M., to try whether there was a modus of 13s. 4d., payable by the lord of the manor of E. K. in lieu of all vicarial tithes, in respect of the lands within the township, the plaintiff gave in evidence a bill filed in the Equity Exchequer in 1826, by the then vicar of M., against certain occupiers of lands, for the subtraction of tithes, in which the then defendants (none of whom were parties to the present issue) set up a claim of a modus of 13s. 4d., payable by the occupiers of lands within the township, and on which a decree was made to take an account of the tithes, and that the defendants should pay such sums, as should be found to be due, with costs: it was held, that this decree, although receivable, was not conclusive evidence on the trial of the above issue; nor was it seemingly binding upon the tithe commissioner:—Mr. Baron Parke stating, "I am of opinion that the rule ought to be discharged. The first ground on which it was moved was, that the judge at nisi prius ought to have told the jury, that the decree of the Equity Exchequer in 1826 was binding on the tithe commissioner when about to make his award, and ought to be considered as equally binding on them. We are not called upon to decide on the correctness of the course taken by the assistant tithe commissioner: if he has acted improperly with respect to this evidence, the plaintiff's remedy, if he have one, is by certiorari. But I am quite clear, that the learned judge did perfectly right in not giving greater weight to the decree of the court of Exchequer, and in telling the jury that the evidence was not binding on them. The issue joined in this case, namely, whether there was a

and it shall be lawful for the judge by whom any such action shall be tried, if he shall think fit, to direct the jury to find a verdict, subject to the opinion of the modus of 13s. 4d. covering the whole of the township of Eye Kettleby, ought to be tried like any other issue, whether there was such a modus or not; and we cannot try the question in any other way, because it arises in consequence of the decree of the commissioner, than if it had been directed by the court of Chancery or this court. All that we have a right to do, is to see that that issue is tried according to the rules of law. The learned judge, as it seems to me, was perfectly right in telling the jury that they were not bound by this decree. But I go further, and say that that decree was not binding even on the commissioner. The 44th section of the statute provides for the case where it shall appear to the commissioners or assistant commissioner that any question concerning any modus or composition real, prescriptive or customary payment, or claim of exemption from, or non-liability to, the payment of tithes relating to the lands in question, shall have been decided by competent authority before the making of the award, and enacts, 'that the commissioners or assistant commissioner shall act on the principle established by such decision;' but that provision must be understood as being confined to such decrees and decisions as are made by a court of competent authority to bind the same persons, as are bound by the award of the commissioners. The legislature can only have meant to give that authority to such judgments of competent courts as would be binding on the parties who were to be bound by the award of the commissioners. This clearly was not a decree of that kind, for its whole effect was to decide that there was not a modus of 13s. 4d. payable by the occupiers of land in the township to the vicar of Eye Kettleby. That was the only point which was decided by the decree; it does not decide the question on which this issue is to be tried, which is, whether a modus of 13s. 4d. is payable by the lord of the manor to the vicar of Eye Kettleby for the whole of the tithes in that township. Therefore, it seems to me that the learned judge was quite correct in his ruling, and that no new trial ought to be granted on that ground." Croughston v. Blake, 12 M. & W. 205.

A court of equity will compel a discovery and production of documents in aid of proceedings at law to try a disputed right under the Tithe Commutation Act, notwithstanding special provisions are contained in that act for those purposes; thus, in Morris v. Norfolk (Duke of), (9 Sim. 488,) the vice-chancellor of England observed: "I have had an opportunity, during the argument of this demurrer, of looking a good deal into the act of parliament; and I do not find that there are any sections which relate to the matter, other than the 10th, the 45th, and 46th sections, with the exception of one section, upon which I shall, presently, make an observation.

"The bill before me is, in my opinion, a mere bill of discovery; and the particular mode in which the injunction is asked, does not appear to me to vary its character at all. The form in which the injunction is asked, is certainly very unusual; but I do not think that anything turns upon that. Whether the court would grant such an injunction or not, I am not, now, to determine; but, by the frame of the bill, nothing is asked but discovery, and an interim injunction: the bill is, therefore, to be considered as a mere bill of discovery.

"I apprehend that, in all respects, that which was the law before the passing of the act, remains the law after the passing of it, except so far as it can be shown, that the law has been altered by express words which have taken away a portion of the ancient law, or altered it, or that the provisions which the act has substituted are, of themselves, necessarily inconsistent with the former state of the law. I make that observation, because it is very well known, that a very serious question arose after the act of parliament was passed which first created the court of Review, whether that act of parliament had taken away the jurisdiction which was exercised by the vice-chancellor's court generally, and also by the lord chancellor. In that act, there were no express words which took away the jurisdiction of the vice-chancellor's court; but it was held, after very considerable discussion, that, although there were no express words, yet the general provisions of the act had the effect of taking away that particular jurisdiction: and that was the opinion which Lord Brougham gave in the case which was argued, at his request, before himself and me.

"It is quite clear, on the face of this act, that there is nothing whatever, in the shape of express provision, which takes away the right of the plaintiff or defendant in the action which the act has directed to be brought in certain cases, to file a bill of discovery. But the question is whether, if there be no express words to take away that right, there is anything to be found in the general provisions of the act, which has that effect. Now what has the act of parliament done? It, first of all, speaks of some proceedings before the commissioners, which are no farther to be noticed here than by observing, that they have taken place, and the result has been that, under the provisions of the act, the present plaintiff in equity, (who was dissatisfied with the decision of the commissioners,) did, within the time appointed by the act, cause an action to be brought, in one of her majesty's courts of law at Westminster, against the person in whose favour the decision was made. He has brought his action; and I do not see why, when, under the provisions of the act of parliament, he has once become a plaintiff in one of the superior courts of law, he is disabled from filing a bill of discovery, in the court of Chancery, for the purpose of supporting his action. The act of parliament, it is true, does provide that the action shall be tried within a limited case; and the verdict which shall be given in any such action, the court upon the case subject to which the same may be this, namely, that the court in which the record, or to any judge of law at Westminster (means a judge acting in the court,) to extend it. It has been said, provision is, or rather bill of discovery from the same objection also any bill of discovery in a case where the extract that informant personally has, that the object of the death of the defendant in his answer; and, inasmuch that the bill is useful to the plaintiff to be a reason why the bill is such a bill. I admit that it might come on before put in; and, in that very would be of no use but suppose that, if that there should be discovery, the very fact of discovery pending, either with the whole single judge, for post-issue until the answer the bill of discovery. I direct, that the parties shall produce, to each respective attorneys or counsel and place as any judge and also to the court of any such issue, all and writings, terriers, maps relating to the matter in dispute, and order were made in the matter of it would be by that which the plaintiff is answer to a bill of discovery; that the defendant making of the judge's of the documents; in which the judge could would have the effect to light; because the that the books, deeds, the custody or power could be produced. I observe that it is not that the defendant has any documents. Suppose to be true, it is quite the judge would have from the defendant, act, or, what is still of the contents been so destroyed. But this action, which to be brought, is per the court of law: res. It seems to me the control of the things are made impossible in the act of parliament. But, at any rate, it is not an action in the nature of an issue directed, by this court, to a court of law. It is an action which the legislature has expressly given to the party dissatisfied with the decision of the commissioners. The fact that there can be no writ of error, only goes to show, that the proceeding is not allowed by the act of parliament; but, nevertheless, the action is still an action in one of the superior courts of law at Westminster; and, consequently, it is an action liable to all the incidents of an action, one of which is, that the plaintiff in the action, may file a bill of discovery in the court of Chancery. One thing has occurred to me, in looking over this act of parliament, which, in my opinion, plainly shows that the legislature did mean that all such rights and remedies should remain, as are not taken away. By the 66th section it is enacted, that no confirmed agreement, award, or apportionment, shall be impeached, after the confirmation thereof, by reason of any mistake or informality therein or in any proceeding relating thereto, so that the proposition is expressly confined to the ground of mistake or informality. But, notwithstanding that provision, a confirmed agreement, award, or apportionment, if it was obtained by fraud, might be set aside, and I cannot but think, that the marked manner in which this section is expressed, shows that it was the intention of the legislature, that all the rights and remedies of the parties to the proceedings under this act of parliament, should remain so far as they are not expressly taken away by the provisions of the act.

"Upon the whole, my opinion is, (after the full discussion which I have heard,) that there is nothing so peculiar in the mode in which this action is directed to be carried on, as to authorize me to say, that the person who, under the provisions of the legislature, has exercised his liberty of bringing his action, shall be deprived of what I conceive to be necessary to bringing the action, that is, the right of filing a bill of discovery in this court in order to support that action. The consequence is, that the defendant must be overruled."

In a suit by a vicar or perpetual curate, against occupiers for tithes, the evidence of a landowner within the same parish, was held, in Oliver (Clerk) v. Latham, (1 Y. & C. N. C. 243,) not to be admissible on behalf of the defendants. Vide Stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85.

On the trial of an action of debt for the treble value of predial tithes, the plaintiff had proved the defendant's occupation of the land, the subtraction of the tithes, its great value, and that tithes had been previously paid in respect of land encroached from the same common. The defendant called witnesses to prove exemption from tithes, by reason of the barrenness of the land. It was held, that, although in the re-examination of a witness for the plaintiff, a question had been given, shall be final and binding upon all parties thereto, unless the court wherein such action shall be brought shall set aside such verdict and order a new trial to be had therein, which it shall be lawful for the said court to do, if it shall see fit: provided also, that in case any such decision shall involve a question of law only, and the parties in difference shall be agreed upon the facts relating thereto, and whereon such decision shall have been founded, the said commissioners or assistant commissioner, at the request of the person dissatisfied, (such request to be made in writing within three calendar months after such decision, and at least fourteen days' previous notice in writing of such request to be given in like manner to the other parties in difference or to their known agents,) shall direct a case to be stated for the opinion of such one of his majesty's courts of law at Westminster as the commissioners or assistant commissioner shall think fit; which case shall be settled by them or him or under their or his direction in case the parties differ about the same, and may be set down for argument and be brought before the court in like manner as other cases are brought before the court; and the decision of such court upon every case so brought before it shall be binding upon all parties concerned therein: provided always, that after such verdict given and not set aside by the court, or after such decision of the court, the said commissioners or assistant commissioner shall be bound by such verdict or decision; and the costs⁽¹⁾ of every such action, or of stating such case and obtaining a decision thereon, shall be in the discretion of the court in or by which the same shall be decided, which may order the same to be taxed by the proper officer of the court, and the like execution may be had for the same as if such costs had been recovered upon a judgment of record of the said court.

" XLVII. And be it enacted, that no proceeding of or before the commissioners or any assistant commissioner, or in any action, or in any case stated, or reference in pursuance of this act, shall abate or cease by reason of the death of any person interested therein.

" XLVIII. And be it enacted, that if any person in whose favour any such decision of the commissioners or any assistant commissioner shall have been made shall die before any such action shall have been brought, or case stated, and before the expiration of the time hereinbefore limited for that purpose, it shall be lawful for every person who might have brought such action or have had such case stated, against the person so dying, to bring or have the same within the time so limited as aforesaid, nominally against such person as if living, and to serve the said commissioners or assistant commissioner with process and notices relating thereto in the same manner as the person deceased might have been served therewith if living; and it shall be lawful for every person entitled to the benefit of such decision as aforesaid, or, in case of any such person being a minor, idiot, lunatic, feme covert, beyond the seas, or under any other legal disability, the guardian, trustee, committee of the estate, husband, or attorney respectively, or in default thereof, such person as may be nominated for that purpose by the commissioners, and whom they are hereby empowered to nominate under their hands and seal, to appear and defend such action or argue such case; and proceedings shall be had therein in the same manner, and the rights of all persons shall be equally bound and concluded by the event of such action or the decision upon such case, as if such person had been living; and the costs of every such action or case shall be in the discretion of the court as aforesaid.

asked as to the fertility of the land, the plaintiff was entitled to adduce evidence in reply to disprove the defence. Gresswilde v. Kemp, 1 C. & Marsh. 635.

(1) Costs.—Where a title commissioner had decided a question of modus against a vicar, and the latter delivered a feigned issue to try that question, which the jury found for the defendants, the court awarded them the costs, under Stat. 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 76, s. 46, the rule being, that when an issue is tried, the unsuccessful party must pay the costs of the issue. Croughton v. Blake, 12 M. & W. 205.

A defendant is entitled to judgment as in case of a nonsuit, where more than two assizes have elapsed since issue joined on a feigned issue under Stat. 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 71, s. 46, and in such case, the court will make an order for costs. *Sandys (Clerk) v. ) Provided always, and be it enacted, that nothing in this act shall deprive any right to tithes which now is or hereafter shall be barred by law for shortening the time required in claims of modus decimandi or for discharge from tithes, or for the limitation of actions and suits in property.

And be it enacted, that as soon as all such suits and differences shall be decided, or if there shall have been no suits or differences then the commissioners or assistant commissioner shall have ascertained and foreseen the total value of all the tithes of the said parish, the commissioners or assistant commissioner shall frame the draft of an award, declaration ascertained as aforesaid shall be the amount of the rent-charge in respect of the tithes of the said parish, and every such draft shall contain particulars hereinbefore required to be inserted in any parochial survey schedule thereto; provided always, that no such award shall be binding on the land instead of the tithes of the parish.

And be it enacted, that as soon as the said draft shall have been made by the commissioners or assistant commissioner, they or he shall deposit a copy of the same in the office of any special report thereunto annexed at some convenient place in the said parish for the inspection of all persons interested in the same, and shall forthwith give notice in such manner as to the commissioners or assistant commissioner seem fit where the said copy may be inspected, and shall also appoint some convenient place and time, (the first not earlier than seven days from the first giving of such notice,) for holding a meeting for the consideration of such intended award by any person interested therein; and the commissioners or assistant commissioner at such meeting as aforesaid shall receive and determine any objections which may be then and there made to the intended award, or adjourn the further hearing thereof, if they or he shall think proper, to a future meeting (3), and may, if they or he shall think proper, direct any further valuation of the lands or tithes or any of them.

And be it enacted, that the time to fix further meetings for the hearing and determining of which further meetings, when not holden by adjournment, notice shall be given in manner hereinbefore directed with regard to the original meeting; and the said commissioners or assistant commissioner shall have heard and considered all such objections they or he shall amend the draft of such award, if they or he shall see occasion.

And be it enacted, that as soon as the commissioners or assistant commissioner have made such amendments in the draft of the award as to them shall seem necessary, they or he shall cause the same to be fairly written, and send it to the office of the commissioners, and the commissioners shall satisfy themselves that all the proceedings incident to the making of the award have been duly performed, and if they shall think that the award is confirmed shall confirm the same under their hands and seal, and shall publish the award the date of such confirmation, and shall publish the fact of the confirmation and the date thereof in the parish in such manner as to them shall seem fit; and every such confirmed award shall be binding (4) on all the lands in the said lands or tithes.

And be it enacted, that as soon as the commissioners shall have confirmed the award, the commissioners or some assistant commissioner shall call a meeting of the owners of land subject to tithes in the said parish, for the purpose of choosing valuers to apportion the amount so awarded among the owners of the land in the said parish, and shall give notice thereof in writing under their hands and seal, to be fixed at least twenty-one days before such meeting on the parsonage of the church, or in some public and conspicuous place within the parish; and one or more valuers or a single valuer may be chosen at such meeting by the land-

"LIV.(2) And be it enacted, that if upon the expiration of six calendar months after the day of the date of the confirmation of any agreement or award no valuer or valuers shall have been appointed, or the apportionment of such valuers or valuer shall not have been made and sent to the office of the commissioners as hereinafter provided, it shall be lawful for the commissioners or some assistant commissioner to apportion the rent-charge previously agreed or awarded to be paid among the lands of the said parish, having regard to the average titheable produce and productive quality of the said lands, according to the discretion and judgment of the commissioners or assistant commissioner, but subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, and so that the several lands may have the full benefit in each case of every modus, composition real, prescriptive and customary payment, and of every exemption from or non-liability to tithes relating to the said lands respectively, and having regard to the several tithes to which the said lands are severally liable.

And be it enacted, that immediately after the passing of this act, and also in the month of January in every year, the comptroller of corn returns for the time being, or such other person as may from time to time be in that behalf authorized by the privy council, shall cause an advertisement to be inserted in the London Gazette, stating what has been, during seven years ending on the Thursday next before Christmas Day then next preceding, the average price of an imperial bushel of British wheat, barley, and oats, computed from the weekly averages of the corn returns.

"LVII.(4) And be it enacted, that every rent-charge charged upon any lands by any such intended apportionment shall be deemed at the time of the confirmation of such apportionment, as hereinafter provided, to be of the value of such number of imperial bushels and decimal parts of an imperial bushel of wheat, barley, and oats, as the same would have purchased at the prices so ascertained by the advertisement to be published immediately after the passing of this act, in case one third part of such rent-charge had been invested in the purchase of wheat, one third part thereof in the purchase of barley, and the remaining third part thereof in the purchase of oats, and the respective quantities of wheat, barley, and oats so ascertained shall be stated in the draught of every apportionment.

(1) And be it enacted, that for the purpose of making any such apportionment, as well as for the purpose of making any award as hereinbefore provided, the commissioners and assistant commissioners may employ such land-surveyors and tithe-valuers as to them shall seem fit, and may order them to be paid for valuing, surveying, mapping, and planning after any rate not exceeding two guineas to every such person for every day that he shall have been so employed, and may assess the same as part of the expenses of making their award or apportionment respectively; and the said commissioners and assistant commissioners, and the land-surveyors and tithe-valuers employed by them respectively, shall have all the powers and be subject to all the provisions hereinbefore enacted concerning the valuers appointed at a parochial meeting, except that they shall not be bound to adopt any principles of apportionment agreed to at any parochial meeting; provided always, that it shall be lawful for such commissioners and assistant commissioners to make any agreement with any such land-surveyors or tithe-valuers for the payment to the same of one sum for the whole duty or any part thereof to be performed by them respectively.

And be it enacted, that every ecclesiastical beneficed person who shall commute the tithes of his benefice under this act may advance or borrow the sum necessary to defray so much of the expenses of commutation as is to be defrayed by him, or any part thereof, and as a security for repayment may charge or assign the rent-charge to be received instead of such tithes for twenty years, or until the principal sum advanced or borrowed, and the interest thereon after the rate of four pounds by the hundred, and the expenses of such charge or assignment, shall be sooner paid: and every incumbent successively shall pay the interest of the sum advanced or borrowed, or of so much thereof as shall then remain unpaid, as the same shall become due, or within one calendar month next following, and also an instalment at the rate of five pounds for every hundred pounds of the principal sum advanced or borrowed, and in default of such payment the ordinary may sequester the profits of the benefice until such payments shall be made, provided that the sum to be so advanced or borrowed shall be ascertained and certified under the hand of any commissioner or assistant commissioner, and shall be by him stated to have been the amount of such expenses properly incurred by such ecclesiastical beneficed person in relation to such commutation.

well Rent-charge (Stat. 151,) it was provided that if the tenant or occupier of any land liable to the payment of a rent-charge should at any time be in arrear for the space of twenty-one days next after any half-yearly day of payment, and no sufficient distress on the premises liable to the payment thereof, it shall be lawful for any judge of his majesty's courts of record at the place, to order a writ to be issued (3) directed to although at the end of one or more of such previous half years there may have been a sufficient distress for the amount then due. Mr. Justice Patterson observing, "The remedy given by this act for the recovery of rent-charge is by distress, under sect. 81. provided that not more than two years' arrears shall be so recoverable, and, in default of such distress, by seizure and possession of the land, under sect. 82, provided that not more than two years' arrears over and above the time of such possession shall be at any time recoverable." Why should one section be construed differently from the other? There is no reason to suppose that, although a party might distrain for an arrear of two years, the legislature intended that he should not enforce the remedy under sect. 82, unless he attempted to distrain at the end of a single half year, and no distress were found. The construction of both clauses must be the same. In the case of proceedings on a vacant possession, (Stat. 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 16,) it never was contended that, if the landlord omitted to enforce his remedy at the end of a first year, he could not avail himself of it afterwards."

And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the court out of which such writ shall have issued, or any judge at chambers, to order the owner of the rent-charge who shall be in possession by virtue of such writ from time to time to render an account of the rents and produce of the lands and of the receipts and payments in respect of the same, and to pay over the surplus (if any) to the person for the time being entitled thereunto, after satisfaction of such arrears of rent-charge and all costs and expenses as aforesaid, and thereupon to order writ of supplicatio to issue to the said writ of habere facias possessionem, and also by rule or order of such court or judge from time to time to give such summary relief to the parties as to the said court or judge shall seem fit.

"LXXXV. (1) Tithes of mills.—"Tithes which are merely personal are necessarily excepted from the operation of the act, because there is nothing to which a permanent rent can be attached; but in regard to mills, they are predial as well as personal; predial in point of locality, and personal in the mode of paying the tithes, which, it is to be observed, are due only of the clear profits of the miller, after a deduction of all necessary expenses, such as rent, servants' wages, repairs, &c. For the law relating to tithes of mills, vide 1 Eagle's Treatise on Tithes, 377. Tithes of mills are, in general, a very precarious profit, for besides the deduction of the expenses of the miller, such tithes are due only of the profits of the grinding of the corn of other persons, which is ground by the miller for hire, and not in respect of the corn which he may grind for the purposes of trade; and therefore a miller, who carries on the trade or business of a mealman or baker, is not bound to pay any tithes for the grinding of corn or grain into meal or flour for the purpose of such trade or business." Eagle on the Tithe Acts, 127.

"The fixing of a permanent rent-charge upon mills is liable to this objection, that if the mill should fall or be pulled down, without being rebuilt, the land will still be liable to a rent-charge far exceeding its annual value, and will, consequently, be wholly unable to bear the burden imposed in respect of the tithes of the mill. The same principle upon which hop grounds and market gardens are to pay a diminished rent-charge when the land is converted to other uses, ought à fortiori to have been applied to mills.

"Moduses for mills being, it is believed, very common, it may not be improper to remark, that, in such cases, the whole process of commutation will, in effect, consist in styling the modus a rent-charge, and transferring it, at the expense of the owner of the mill, from the person of the miller to the mill itself, or, more properly, to the land upon which it stands; for if there should hereafter be no mill upon the land the land will necessarily be subjected to the burden of the rent-charge: whereas, under the ancient law, the payment of the modus would have ceased when the mill, which was the subject of the modus, no longer existed.

"It remains to be mentioned, that when the bill was first brought into the House of Commons, this clause contained a provision, that the act should not extend 'to any mixed tithes not arising upon land.' This was intended to obviate an objection very similar to that which has just been alluded to in regard to mills, namely, that where mixed tithes, as milk and calves, have been produced by cows kept wholly in cow-houses, and have not, in fact, been produced upon the land, and were an accidental and temporary profit, it would be unjust to fix a permanent rent-charge upon the buildings, or the lands on which they stand; but the provision was, it is believed, abandoned, in consequence of its having been discovered that it would be nugatory, because, in contemplation of law, there are no mixed tithes, except, perhaps, tithes of fish, which can be considered as 'mixed tithes not arising upon land.' " Ibid.

(2) Any mineral tithes.—By Stat. 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, s. 9, parties who are competent to make a parochial agreement are empowered, at any time before the confirmation of any apportionment after a compulsory award, to "enter into a parochial agreement for the commutation of Easter offerings, mortuaries, or surplice fees, or tithes of fish, or fishing, or mineral tithes."

(3) Rent or value.—"Besides the customary payments which are here mentioned, there are other payments for houses, which consist of prescriptive payments of fixed sums of money for particular houses, and which are within the operation of the act, although, in such cases, the owner of the house cannot possibly derive any benefit from having such payments made a perpetual charge upon the house: not to mention the expense of the process. There seems to be no reason for interfering with these money payments, which being fixed and certain, are not properly the subject of commutation, and at the same time excepting payments which fluctuate with the rent or value of the houses, and are, therefore, clearly within the principle of the act." (2) Under the authority of this act:—It seems, that in order to entitle a party to notice he must have reasonable grounds for supposing that the act done by him was in execution or under the authority of the act. In Cook v. Leonard, (6 B. & C. 353,) Mr. Justice Bayley observed: "Where a statute gives protection to persons acting in execution, or in pursuance of it, all persons acting under its provisions are entitled to that protection, although they exceed their authority by so doing. There must, however, be some limits to that rule, and it seems to me, that there are cases which warrant this distinction.

If an officer does any act, part of which is, and part of which is not, authorised by the statute; or if a magistrate act in a case which his general character authorizes him to do, the mere excess of authority in either case does not deprive the officer or magistrate of that protection which is conferred upon those who act in execution of it; but where there is a total absence of authority to do any part of that which has been done, the party doing the act is not entitled to that protection." *Vide etiam Butler v. "XII. And be it enacted, that when any scheme prepared under the authority of this act shall be approved by his majesty in council it shall be lawful for his majesty in council to issue an order or orders ratifying the same, and specifying the time or times when such scheme or the several parts thereof shall take effect, and to direct in every such order that the same be registered by the registrar of each of the dioceses the bishops whereof may or shall be in any respect affected thereby, and in any newly-created diocese by such person as shall be for that purpose named in such order, which person shall in such last-mentioned diocese become registrar there, and so continue as long as he shall demean himself well in his office.

"XIII. And be it enacted, that every such order shall, as soon as may be after the making and issuing thereof by his majesty in council, be inserted and published in the London Gazette.

"XIV. And be it enacted, that so soon as any such order in council shall be so registered and gazetted, it shall in all respects, and as to all things therein contained, have and be of the same force and effect as if all and every part thereof were included in this act, any law, statute, canon, letters patent, grant, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

"XV. And be it enacted, that a copy of every order of his majesty in council made under this act shall be laid before each house of parliament in the month of January in every year, if parliament shall be then sitting, or if parliament be not then sitting within one week after the next meeting thereof.

"XVI. And be it enacted, that the registrar of every diocese to whom any order of his majesty in council made by virtue of this act shall be delivered shall forthwith register the same in the registry of his diocese; and the persons who shall be for that purpose appointed in the dioceses of Manchester and Ripon shall forthwith register every such order in books to be by them for that purpose provided, which shall thenceforth become the registry of those dioceses respectively; and if any such registrar or other person shall refuse or neglect to register any such order he shall for every day during which he shall so offend forfeit twenty pounds, and if his offence shall continue for the space of three months he shall forfeit his office, and it shall be lawful for the bishop of the diocese, or for his majesty, as the case may be, to appoint a successor thereto.

"XVII. And be it enacted, that for such registration as aforesaid no registrar shall be entitled to receive any fee or reward, but that on every search for any such order he shall be entitled to receive a fee of three shillings, and for every copy or extract of any such order, certified by him, he shall be entitled to receive for every folio of ninety words four pence; and the copy of every such entry, certified by the registrar, shall be admissible as evidence in all courts and places whatsoever.

"XVIII. And be it enacted, that after the passing of this act no ecclesiastical dignity, office, or benefice shall be held in commendam by any bishop, unless he shall so hold the same at the time of passing thereof; and that every commendam thereafter granted, whether to retain or to receive, and whether temporary or perpetual, shall be absolutely void, to all intents and purposes.

"XIX. And be it enacted, that all archdeacons throughout England and Wales shall have and exercise full and equal jurisdiction within their respective archdeaconries, any usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

"XX. (1) And whereas it may be expedient to consider the state and jurisdiction of all the ecclesiastical courts in England and Wales; be it enacted, that nothing herein contained, nor any order of his majesty in council made under the authority of this act, either for altering the limits of either of the existing provinces or the boundaries of any existing diocese or archdeaconry, or for uniting any existing sees, or for creating any new bishopric or archdeaconry, or for appointing any registrar under the provisions of this act, or for any other purpose whatever, shall for one year after the passing of this act, or if parliament shall be then sitting till the end of the session of parliament, in any manner affect or be construed to power, or authority of any or either of the existing ecclesiastical courts in England or Wales, or the extent or limits thereof, but that during the said period every such court shall continue in all matters within the present limits to exercise the same jurisdiction as heretofore has been exercised, and that in all cases of monitions to reside, and payment of the stipends of curates, and of proceedings consequent thereon, as hereinafter excepted, and in all cases of licences granted to the same shall issue only under the authority and in the name of the bishop of the diocese, whether such diocese be according to the present territorial divisions or newly created under the authority of this act: provided that it shall be necessary to institute in any ecclesiastical court proceedings consequent thereon, such proceedings shall be commenced, carried on, and tried by the same court which at the time of the passing of this act had jurisdiction in such matters respectively, and in all cases shall be commenced at the instance of a bishop in the name of the judge of such court, that nothing herein contained shall affect any power or authority of the archbishops at the time of the passing of this act, but that all such powers and authorities, except as may be otherwise provided by any order of law made and issued in pursuance of this act, shall to all intents and purposes remain subject to the same authority and jurisdiction as if they had not been passed.

It is enacted, that nothing herein contained, nor any such order or decree, shall during such period as last aforesaid, be construed to alter or change in whatsoever the law of bonis notabilibus as it exists at the time of the passing of this act, notwithstanding any change of province, diocese, archbishopric, or jurisdiction whatsoever.

It is enacted, that all marriage licences shall during such period continue to be granted in the same manner and by the same authorities as before the passing of this act.

It is enacted, that during such period every ecclesiastical court shall be had shall have power to send for and enforce the production of all original instruments and documents relating to such proceedings, and to exercise the same authority the same may have been issued.

It is further enacted, that in case the office of judge, registrar of any or either of the ecclesiastical courts in England or Wales (the Prerogative court of Canterbury) shall become vacant during the said period, the person who may be thereunto appointed shall hold such office subject to all regulations and alterations affecting the same hereafter made and provided by or under the authority of parliament, and shall not by his appointment thereto acquire any vested interest or claim or title to compensation in respect thereof, in case the same shall be abolished by parliament.

And whereas by an act passed in the fifth and sixth years of his Majesty George the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales,' provision was made concerning the sale of preferments in the patronage of the several municipal corporations, at such time and in such manner as the commissioners of the said act should direct; be it enacted, that from and after the passing of this act the provisions in the said recited act relating to the said commissioners shall apply and be held to apply to the persons appointed under this act by the style and title of 'The Commissioners for England.'

STATUTA GULIELMI IV. A.D. 1830—1837.

CXL. STAT. 6 & 7 GULIELMI 4, c. 85 (1). A.D. 1836.

"An Act for Marriages (2) in England."

"Whereas it is expedient to amend the law of marriages in England, be enacted by the king's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that after the first day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, notwithstanding anything in this act contained, all the rules prescribed by the rubric concerning the solemnizing of marriages, shall continue to be duly observed by every person in holy orders of the Church of England (3) who shall solemnize any marriage in England: provided always, that where by any law or canon in force before the passing of this act it is provided that any marriage may be solemnized after publication of banns, such marriage may be solemnized in like manner on production of the registrar's certificate (4) as hereinafter provided (5); provided also, that nothing in this act contained shall affect the right of the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors and his and their proper officers, to grant special licences to marry at any convenient time and place, or the right of any surrogate or other person now having authority to grant licences for marriages.

"II. And be it enacted, that the society of friends commonly called quakers and also persons professing the Jewish religion, may continue to contract and solemnize marriages according to the usages of the said society and of the said persons respectively; and every such marriage is hereby declared and confirmed good in law, provided that the parties to such marriage be both of the said society or both persons professing the Jewish religion respectively; provided also, that notice to the registrar shall have been given, and the registrar's certificate shall have been issued in manner hereinafter provided.

"III. And be it enacted, that the superintendent registrar of births and deaths of every union, parish, or place, shall be, in right of his office, superintendent registrar of marriages within such union, parish, or place, and that such union, parish, or place, shall be deemed the district of such superintendent registrar of marriages.

"IV. And be it enacted, that in every case of marriage intended to be solemnized in England after the said first day of March, according to the rites of the church of England, (unless by licence or by special licence, or after publication of banns,) and in every case of marriage intended to be solemnized in England after the said first day of March, according to the usages of the quakers or Jews, or according to any form authorized by this act, one of the parties shall give notice under his or her hand, in the form of schedule (A) to this act annexed, or to the like effect, to the superintendent registrar of the district within which the parties shall have dwelt for not less than seven days then next preceding, or if the parties dwell in the districts (6) of different superintendent registrars, shall give the like notice to the superintendent registrar of each district, and shall state therein the name and surname and the profession or condition of each of the parties intending marriage, the dwelling place of each of them, and the time not being less than seven days during which each has dwelt therein, and the church or other building in which the marriage is to be solemnized; provided that if either party shall have dwelt in the place stated in the notice during more than one calendar month, it may be stated therein that he or she hath dwelt there one month and upwards.

"V. And be it enacted, that the superintendent registrar shall file all such notices, and keep them with the records of his office, and shall also forthwith enter a true copy of all such notices fairly into a book, to be for that purpose furnished.

And be it enacted, that if such superintendent registrar shall be clerk to the guardians of any poor law union, or of any parish or place comprising the district for which such superintendent registrar shall act, he shall read such notices as hereinafter directed; and if he shall not be such clerk, then he shall transmit to such clerk on the day previous to each weekly meeting of such guardians all such notices of intended marriage as he shall have received on or since the day previous to the weekly meeting immediately preceding the same; and such clerk shall read such notices immediately after the minutes of the proceedings of such guardians at their last meeting shall have been read; and such notices shall be so read three several times in three successive weeks at the weekly meetings of such guardians, unless in any case licence for marriage shall be sooner granted, and notice of such licence being granted shall have been given to such clerk: provided also, that if it shall happen that the board of guardians of any such union, parish, or place, shall not so meet, it shall be sufficient for the purposes of this act that such notices shall be read at any meeting of such guardians which shall be held (2) within twenty-one days from the day of such notice being entered.

And be it enacted, that after the expiration of seven days, if the marriage is to be solemnized by licence, or of twenty-one days if the marriage is to be solemnized without licence, after the entry of such notice, the superintendent registrar, upon being requested so to do by or on behalf of the party by whom the notice was given, shall issue (3) under his hand a certificate in the form of schedule (B) to this act annexed (4), provided that no lawful impediment be shown to the satisfaction of the superintendent registrar why such certificate should not issue, and provided that the issue of such certificate shall not have been sooner forbidden in manner hereinafter mentioned by any person or persons authorized in that

(2) Meeting . . . shall be held:—Vide Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 24.

(3) Shall issue:—The superintendent registrar has no power to issue his certificate pursuant to Stat. 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 85, s. 7, in cases where it is proposed, that the marriage shall take place out of his district. Thus, in Esperie Brady, (6 Dowl. P. C. 332,) an application was made for a writ of mandamus, to be directed to the superintendent registrar of the Salford union, to issue his certificate pursuant to Stat. 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 85, s. 7. The parties in question resided in the Salford union: they were [Roman] catholics, and were desirous of being married without licence, at a [Roman] catholic chapel, in Manchester, but which was not within the district of the superintendent registrar, there being no [Roman] catholic chapel within the district, over which, the registrar had jurisdiction. The question was, whether, as there was no [Roman] catholic chapel within the district in which they resided, they had a right to a certificate for the purpose of marrying at a [Roman] catholic chapel not within the district;—to which Mr. Justice Patteson observed, "What authority is there for saying, that persons can be married in a different district from that in which they reside? The intention of the act was not that parties should be married, in fact, in a foreign country, or that notice could be given in London, in order to be married in Cumberland. There are no words in the act which give leave to be married anywhere, wherever the notice may have been given. I will, however, consider the case." His lordship afterwards stated, "I cannot think that, because, in one section (11) it is said, that the superintendent registrar cannot act, except within his district, that, in the other, (sect. 7,) where nothing is said on the subject, he may grant his certificate to marry at any place, without his district. It is impossible to construe acts of parliament on such a principle. However, on reading sect 25, it appears to me perfectly clear, what the intention of the legislature was. It was not the intention of the legislature, that the registrar should have power to grant his certificate for marriages out of his own district. The superintendent registrar appears to have put a construction on the act, and adopted a practice thereon, which, as soon as it was brought to the knowledge of the registrar-general, he put a stop to it, and I quite agree with him in the construction which he has put on the act. I cannot, therefore, grant the rule now sought to be obtained."

behalf, as hereinafter is provided; and every such certificate shall state the particulars set forth in the notice, the day on which the notice was entered, and that the full period of seven days or of twenty-one days, (as the case may be,) has elapsed since the entry of such notice, and that the issue of such certificate has not been forbidden by any person or persons authorized in that behalf; and for every such certificate the superintendent registrar shall be entitled to have a fee of one shilling.

“VIII. And be it enacted, that the registrar-general shall furnish to every superintendent registrar a sufficient number of forms of certificates, the cost of which shall be accounted for by the superintendent registrar to the registrar-general; and in order to distinguish the certificates to be issued for marriages by licence from the certificates to be issued for marriages without licence, a watermark in the form of the word ‘Licence,’ in Roman letters, shall be laid and manufactured in the substance of the paper on which the certificates to be issued for marriage by licence shall be written or printed; and every certificate to be issued for marriage by licence shall be printed with red ink, and every certificate to be issued for marriage without licence shall be printed with black ink, and such other distinctive marks between the two kinds of certificate shall be used from time to time as shall seem fit to the registrar-general.

“IX. And be it enacted, that any person authorized in that behalf may forbid the issue of the superintendent registrar’s certificate, by writing at any time before the issue of such certificate the word ‘forbidden,’ opposite to the entry of the notice of such intended marriage in the marriage notice book, and by subscribing thereto his or her name and place of abode, and his or her character, in respect of either of the parties, by reason of which he or she is so authorized; and in case the issue of any such certificate shall have been so forbidden the notice and all proceedings thereupon shall be utterly void.

“X. And be it enacted, that after the said first day of March, the like consent⁽¹⁾ shall be required to any marriage in England solemnized by licence as would have been required by law to marriages solemnized by licence immediately before the passing of this act; and every person whose consent to a marriage by licence is required by law is hereby authorized to forbid the issue of the superintendent registrar’s certificate, whether the marriage is intended to be by licence or without licence.

“XI. And be it enacted, that after the said first day of March every superintendent registrar shall have authority to grant licences for marriage in any building registered as hereinafter provided within any district under his superintendence, or in his office, in the form of schedule (C) to this act annexed, and for every such licence shall be entitled to have of the party requiring the same the sum of three pounds above the value of the stamps necessary on granting such licence; and every superintendent registrar shall four times in every year, on such days as shall be appointed by the registrar-general, make a return to the registrar-general of every licence granted by him since his last return, and of the particulars stated concerning the parties: provided always, that no superintendent registrar shall grant any such licence until he shall have given security by his bond in the sum of one hundred pounds to the registrar-general for the due and faithful execution of his office: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall authorize any superintendent registrar to grant any licence for marriage in any church or chapel in which marriages may be solemnized according to the rites of the church of England, or in any church or chapel belonging to the church of England, or licensed for the celebration of divine worship according to the rites and ceremonies of the church of England, or any licence for marriage in any registered building which shall not be within his district.

(1) Consent: The consent required by Stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 16 (enâ 1237), is directory, and a marriage without such consent is valid.

It will be perceived that Stat. 4 Geo. 4, c.

And be it enacted, that any proprietor or trustee of a separate building(2), certified according to law as a place of religious worship, may apply to the superintendent registrar of the district, in order that such building may be registered for solemnizing marriages therein, and in such case shall deliver to the superintendent registrar a certificate, signed in duplicate by twenty householders at the least, that such building has been used by them during one year at the least as their usual place of public religious worship, and that they are desirous that such place should be registered as aforesaid, each of which certificates shall be countersigned by the proprietor or trustee by whom the same shall be delivered; and the superintendent registrar shall send both certificates to the registrar-general, who shall register such building accordingly in a book to be kept for that purpose at the general register office; and the registrar-general shall indorse on both certificates the date of the registry, and shall keep one certificate with the other records of the general register office, and shall return the other certificate to the superintendent registrar, who shall keep the same with the other records of his office; and the superintendent registrar shall enter the date of the registry of such building in a book to be furnished to him for that purpose by the registrar-general, and shall give a certificate of such registry under his hand, on parchment or vellum, to the proprietor or trustee by whom the certificates are countersigned, and shall give public notice of the registry thereof by advertisement in some newspaper circulating within the county, and in the London Gazette; and for every such entry, certificate, and publication, the superintendent registrar shall receive at the time of the delivery to him of the certificates the sum of three pounds.

"XIX. And be it enacted, that if at any time subsequent to the registry of any building for solemnizing marriages therein it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the registrar-general that such building has been disused for the public religious worship of the congregation on whose behalf it was registered as aforesaid, the registrar-general shall cause the registry thereof to be cancelled; provided that if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the registrar-general that the same congregation use instead thereof some other such building for the purpose of public religious worship, the registrar-general may substitute and register such new place of worship instead of the disused building, although such new place of worship may not have been used for that purpose during one year then next preceding; and every application for cancelling the registry of any such building, or for such substitution and registry of a substituted building, shall be made to the registrar-general by or through the superintendent registrar of the district; and such cancel or substitution, when made, shall be made known by the registrar-general to the superintendent registrar, who shall enter the fact and the date thereof in the book provided for the registry of such buildings, and shall certify and publish such cancel or substitution and registry in manner hereinbefore provided in the case of the original registry of the disused building; and for every such substitution the superintendent registrar shall receive, at the

of the certificate from the party requiring the substitution, and after such cancel or substitution shall have been made, in general it shall not be lawful to solemnize any marriage, unless the same shall be again registered in the manner provided.

It is enacted, that after the expiration of the said period of twenty days if the marriage is by licence, marriages may be solemnized in the building stated as aforesaid in the notice of such marriage, parties described in the notice and certificate, according to the form (1) as they may see fit to adopt: provided nevertheless, that the marriage shall be solemnized with open doors, between the hours of ten in the forenoon, in the presence of some registrar of the district in which the building is situate, and of two or more credible persons, who shall be witnesses, each of the parties shall declare, that I know not of any lawful impediment why I, A. B., be joined in matrimony to C. D.

And the other shall say to the other, I, A. B., do take thee, C. D., to be my lawful wedded wife [or husband.]

And there be no lawful impediment to the marriage of such persons.

It is enacted, that any persons who shall object to marry under this act in any such registered building may, after due notice and in the presence of the registrar and some registrar of the district, and of two or more witnesses, with open doors, and between the hours aforesaid, in and using the form of words hereinbefore provided in the form (1) in such registered building.

It is enacted, that the registrar shall be entitled for every marriage solemnized under this act in his presence to have from the parties the sum of ten shillings, if the marriage shall be by licence, and five shillings.

It is enacted, that the registrar shall forthwith register every marriage in the manner aforesaid in his presence, in a marriage register to him for that purpose from time to time by the registrar-general, the form provided for the registration of marriages by an act of session of parliament, intituled, 'An Act for registering marriages in England,' the cost of which shall be defrayed in whole or in part out of the moneys provided for the cost of providing register books of births and deaths; and every marriage shall be signed by the person by or before whom the marriage shall have been solemnized, if there shall be any such person, and also by the parties married, and attested by two witnesses; and a copy of the register shall be made in order from the beginning to the end of the year.

It is enacted, that in every year, on such days as shall be appointed by the registrar-general, within one calendar month next after the first day of April, the first day of July, the first day of October, and the first day of January, respectively, every registrar shall make and deliver to the registrar-general of his district, a true copy, certified by him under his hand and seal, in the form of schedule (D) to this act annexed, of all the entries in the marriage register book kept by him since the last delivery, and the registrar shall verify the same, and if found to be correct shall certify the same to be a true copy; and if there shall have been no delivery of the last certified copy, the registrar shall deliver a certificate shall be delivered to the superintendent registrar.

trar as aforesaid, and countersigned by him; and the registrar shall keep safely the said register book until it shall be filled, and shall then deliver it to the superintendent registrar to be kept by him with the records of his office.

"XXV. And be it enacted, that after any marriage shall have been solemnized it shall not be necessary in support of such marriage to give any proof of the actual dwelling (1) of either of the parties previous to the marriage within the district wherein such marriage was solemnized for the time required by this act, or of the consent of any person whose consent thereunto is required by law; nor shall any evidence be given to prove the contrary in any suit touching the validity of such marriage.

"XXVI. And whereas it is expedient that provision should be made, under proper restrictions, for relieving the inhabitants of populous districts remote from the parish church, or from any chapel wherein marriages may be lawfully celebrated according to the rites and ceremonies of the church of England, from the inconvenience to which they may be thereby subjected in the solemnization of their marriages; be it therefore enacted, that, with the consent under the hand and seal of the patron and incumbent respectively of the church of the parish or district in which may be situate any public chapel with or without a chapelry thereunto annexed, or any chapel duly licensed for the celebration of divine service according to the rites and ceremonies of the church of England, or any chapel the minister whereof is duly licensed to officiate therein according to the rites and ceremonies of the church of England, or without such consent after two calendar months' notice in writing given by the registrar of the diocese to such patron and incumbent respectively, the bishop of the diocese may, if he shall think it necessary for the due accommodation and convenience of the inhabitants, authorize by a licence under his hand and seal the solemnization of marriages in any such chapel for persons residing within a district the limits whereof shall be specified in the bishop's licence, and under such provisions as to the amount, appropriation, or apportionment of the dues, and as to other particulars, as to the said bishop may seem fit, and as may be specified in the said licence; provided that it shall be lawful for any patron or incumbent who shall refuse or withhold consent to the grant of any such licence to deliver to the bishop, under his or her hand and seal, a statement of the reasons for which such consent shall have been so refused or withholden; and no such licence shall be granted by any bishop, until he shall have inquired into the matter of such reasons; and every instrument of consent of the patron and incumbent, or, if such consent be refused or withholden, a copy of the notice under the hand of the registrar, and every statement of reasons alleged as aforesaid by the patron or incumbent, with the bishop's adjudication thereupon under his hand and seal, shall be registered in the registry of the diocese; and thenceforth and until the said licence be revoked marriages solemnized in such chapel shall be as valid to all intents and purposes as if the same had been solemnized in the parish church, or in any chapel where marriages might heretofore have been legally solemnized.

"XXVII. And be it enacted, that all fees, dues, and other emoluments on account of the solemnization of marriages which belong to the incumbent or clerk respectively of any church or chapel in any parish or district within which the solemnization of marriages shall be authorized as aforesaid shall respectively be received, until the avoidance of such church or chapel next after the passing of this act, for and on account of such incumbent, and, until the vacancy in the office of clerk next after the passing of this act, for and on account of such clerk, and be paid over to them, except such portion of the fees, dues, or other emoluments as the said bishop of the diocese, with the consent of the said incumbent and clerk respectively, shall in such aforesaid licence assign to the minister and clerk respectively of the chapel in which the solemnization of marriages shall be authorized as aforesaid; and that it shall be lawful for the said bishop in and by such licence, without any such consent, to declare that from and after such next avoidance or vacancy act passed in the fifty-second year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, intituled, 'An Act for the better regulating Pariah and other Registers of Births, Baptisms, Marriages, and Burials in England,' and also an act passed in the fourth year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act for amending the Laws respecting the Solemnization of Marriages in England,' are insufficient for the purpose aforesaid; be it therefore enacted by the king's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that after the first day of March in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven so much of the said acts as relates to the registration of marriages shall be repealed.

"II. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for his majesty to provide a proper office in London or Westminster, to be called, 'The General Register Office,' for keeping a register of all births, deaths, and marriages of his majesty's subjects in England, and to appoint for the said office under the great seal of the United Kingdom a registrar-general of births, deaths, and marriages, in England, and from time to time at pleasure to remove the said registrar-general, and appoint some other person in his room.

"III. And be it enacted, that the lord treasurer or lords commissioners of his majesty's Treasury, or any three of them, or the registrar-general, subject to the approval of the said lords commissioners, shall appoint from time to time such officers, clerks, and servants as they shall deem necessary to carry on the business of the general registry office, and at pleasure remove them or any of them; and the said lord treasurer or lords commissioners shall fix the salary of the registrar-general, so that the same shall not at any time exceed the sum of one thousand pounds yearly, and shall fix the salaries of the officers, clerks, and servants in fit proportion according to the duties they may have to perform.

"IV. And be it enacted, that the salaries of the registrar-general, and of the said officers, clerks, and servants, and the amount of the sums hereinafter provided to be paid to the superintendent registrars for every entry in the certified copies of the registers, and all expenses of carrying on the business of the general registry office not herein otherwise provided for, shall be paid by the said lord treasurer or lords commissioners of his majesty's treasury out of the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

"V. And be it enacted, that one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, or the registrar-general with the approbation of such principal secretary, from time to time may make regulations for the management of the said register office, and for the duties of the registrar-general, clerks, officers, and servants of the said office, and of the registrars, deputy registrars, and superintendent registrars hereinafter mentioned, in the execution of this act, so that they be not contrary to the provi-

receive it for the purpose, &c. whereof defendant had notice; and that defendant unlawfully, and in abuse of his office, without legal authority or excuse, and against the will of the executors, detained the body a long time in the gaol, to wit from, &c. until, &c., when defendant, unlawfully and indecently, &c. and against the will, &c. buried the body, without any rite of Christian burial, or any funeral ceremony or observance, in a place not being a consecrated burial ground, or a customary or fit place for burial, to wit, a yard of and within the precincts of the gaol. There were other counts, slightly varying the statement. The second count alleged a refusal to deliver up, &c. unless the executors would account with defendant concerning certain claims of money which he pretended to have against Foster's estate, and pay defendant what should appear due; and that defendant wrongfully detained, &c. under pretext of such claims

(the executors not accounting, &c.) until, &c. when he buried, &c. Plea, not guilty.

"The case was tried before Mr. Justice Maule, at the York summer assizes, 1842. The defendant's counsel contended that some necessary allegations were wanting in the indictment, but did not object that an indictment would not lie. The case for the prosecution having been gone through, it was suggested by the learned judge, and agreed, that the defendant should withdraw his plea, submit to a verdict of guilty, and enter into his own recognizance to appear for judgment when called upon."

But his lordship said, at the close of the case, "that the notion of a gaoler being authorized to detain a dead body on account of pecuniary claims, was a mistake, and that a gaoler doing so, was guilty of a misconduct in his public character, for which he was liable to prosecution."

"XVIII. And be it enacted, that the registrar-general shall furnish to every superintendent registrar, for the use of the registrars under his superintendence, a sufficient number of register books of births and of register books of deaths, and of forms for certified copies thereof, as hereinafter provided, at a reasonable price, to be fixed from time to time by one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, the cost whereof shall be borne by the union, parish, or place in or for which the superintendent registrar is appointed, and shall be paid by the guardians or by the churchwardens and overseers (as the case may be) out of the monies coming to their hands or control as such guardians or churchwardens and overseers, to the registrar, and shall be accounted for by him to the registrar-general; and every registrar shall be authorized and is hereby required to inform himself carefully of every birth and every death which shall happen within his district after the said first day of March, and to learn and register, as soon after the event as conveniently may be done, without fee or reward, save as hereinafter mentioned, in one of the said books, the particulars required to be registered according to the forms in the said schedules (A) and (B) respectively touching every such birth or every such death, as the case may be, which shall not have been already registered, every such entry being made in order from the beginning to the end of the book.

“XXXIII. And be it enacted, that the rector, vicar, or curate of every such church and chapel, and every such registering officer and secretary, shall, in the months of April, July, October, and January respectively, make and deliver to the superintendent registrar of the district in which such church or chapel is

The statute does not seem to have been framed to meet a case of this kind. The only provision relating to the correction of errors in the register, is contained in the 44th section, and that section merely speaks of errors committed in the form or substance of the entry, which are to be corrected in the presence of certain persons therein named, the parents of the child being expressly mentioned. We will consider the application, and state in a day or two our opinion."

"XXXIV. And be it enacted, that every superintendent registrar shall, four times in every year, on such days as shall be therefore named by the registrar-general, send to the registrar-general all the certified copies of the registers of births, deaths, and marriages which he shall have so received during the three calendar months next preceding such quarterly days of transmission respectively: and if it shall appear, by interruption of the regular progression of numbers or otherwise, that the copy of any part of any book has not been duly delivered to him, he shall procure, as far as possible, consistently with the provisions of this act, that the same may be remedied and supplied; and every such superintendent registrar shall be entitled to receive the sum of two-pence for every entry in such certified copies; and every superintendent registrar shall make out an account four times in every year of the number of entries in the certified copies sent to him during the last quarter, and the certified copies so sent to the general registry office shall be thereafter kept in the said office in such order and manner as the registrar-general, under the direction of the secretary of state, shall think fit, so that the same may be most readily seen and examined.

"II. And be it enacted, that the yearly rent to be reserved on every such last-mentioned conveyance shall be ascertained in manner following; that is to say, when the fine and fees payable by such inferior tenant upon each renewal of his interest in such lands, tenements, or hereditaments shall be a fixed and ascertained sum, then, in the case of leases or interests renewable every year, the amount of such fine and fees, or, in the case of leases renewable at longer intervals than every year, the annual average amount of such fine and fees computed as by the said first-recited act directed for the purposes of that act, shall be added to the yearly rent reserved and made payable by the lease or contract under which such lands, tenements, or hereditaments are held by such inferior tenant; and when the fine and fees payable by such inferior tenant upon every such renewal as aforesaid shall be a fixed proportion of or dependent upon the renewal fine payable by the immediate superior tenant of said lands, tenements, or hereditaments, then there shall be added to the yearly rent reserved upon such lease or contract a sum of money bearing a like proportion to the average annual amount of the renewal fine so payable by such immediate superior tenant, as the same shall have been ascertained by the ecclesiastical commissioners for Ireland pursuant to the said recited acts; and such yearly rent reserved upon such lease or contract, together with such sum of money so to be added thereto as aforesaid, shall be the future rent to be reserved on the conveyance of a perpetual estate or interest in such lands, tenements, or hereditaments to such inferior tenant.

"III. And be it enacted, that in case of any dispute or difference between such inferior tenant and his next immediate landlord, or in case such landlord shall not execute to such tenant a conveyance of the fee-simple and inheritance of and in such lands, tenements, and hereditaments within one calendar month after the same shall have been duly tendered to him or to his known agent, or in case such next immediate landlord shall be an infant or lunatic, or shall not be resident in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, then and in every such case it shall and may be lawful for such inferior tenant to apply to the court of Chancery or court of Exchequer in Ireland by petition setting forth the facts and circumstances of the case; and it shall and may be lawful for such court to hear such petition in a summary manner, and to make such order thereon as such court shall think fit, and to appoint a person to execute such conveyance to such tenant in the name of such landlord, in case such landlord shall reside out of the jurisdiction of such court or shall labour under any legal disability, or in case such court for any other reason shall think it expedient to appoint such person; and every such conveyance so executed shall be valid and effectual to all intents and purposes.

“XX. And whereas it is expedient to make more effectual provision for enforcing payment of stipends or salaries for the maintenance of officiating clergymen in parishes whereof the tithes are appropriate or inappropriate, and the owners thereof are bound to maintain such clergymen; and whereas by the said recited act of the third and fourth years of his present majesty's reign it was provided, that in any case where the owners of impropriations or inappropriate tithes are by law bound, but refuse or neglect to repair the chancel of any church, or to maintain an officiating minister, it should be lawful for the said ecclesiastical commissioners, or for the archbishop or bishop of the diocese, to present a petition to the court of Chancery or Exchequer in Ireland, praying relief, and such courts were authorized and required to hear such petition in a summary way, and to make such order thereon as should appear just: and whereas it is expedient to extend the said recited provisions of the said act, be it therefore enacted, that the same shall be deemed and taken to extend and shall extend to cases where the owners of appropriations or appropriate tithes are by law bound, but refuse or neglect to repair the chancel of any church or to maintain an officiating minister, in like manner and as fully to all intents and purposes as to cases where the owners of impropriations or impropriate tithes are so bound and so refuse or neglect to repair the chancel of any church, or to maintain an officiating minister.

And be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the court to which any such petition shall be presented to appoint a receiver over any such appropriate or impropriate tithes for payment of any such repairs, stipend, or salary, or arrears thereof, or to direct that any receiver already appointed over such tithes shall pay such repairs, stipend, or salary to the person entitled to receive the same, in preference and priority to all other charges whatsoever.

"XXV. And whereas it appears by the report of certain commissioners constituted and appointed by his majesty for inquiring into ecclesiastical revenues and patronage in Ireland, bearing date the fifteenth day of April one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, that there are in certain cathedral churches divers subordinate corporations known by various names, and that some of such corporations have dwindled down to a single individual in each, who appears to be wholly discharged of any duty whatever, and that some such offices would long since have become wholly obsolete and extinct but for the emoluments which still attach and are enjoyed by the individuals who fill them; be it therefore enacted, that the right, title, and interest in and to all lands, tithes, rents, profits, and other emoluments heretofore held and enjoyed by the vicars choral of the cathedral church of Saint Patrick's Cashel, or by any corporation of or belonging to any cathedral church in Ireland, known by the names of minor or petty canons, vicars choral, vicars choral and organists, prebendaries and vicars, or vicars and choirmen, or by any other name, and whether sole or aggregate, who shall not discharge any duty, or shall not discharge duties commensurate with the extent of their emoluments, shall, in the case of the said vicars choral of the cathedral church of Saint Patrick's Cashel, from and after the passing of this act, and in the case of each and every such other corporation as aforesaid whenever the lord lieutenant in council shall on the recommendation of the said ecclesiastical commissioners think fit so to direct, vest in the said ecclesiastical commissioners, subject nevertheless to all valid leases, charges, and incumbrances now affecting the same, and that the rents, issues, and profits thereof shall be by the said ecclesiastical commissioners applied during the lives of the present members of such corporations respectively to their use, in the same manner and proportions as the same may now be enjoyed by or dividable amongst each and every of them; and that on the demise or cession of the respective members of such corporations adequate provision be made out of such rents, issues, and profits for the due maintenance of such and so many of his or their successors as may in the judgment of the said commissioners be required for the effectual discharge of the duties, if any, appertaining to the members of such corporations respectively, in cases where such provision is not made from other sources; and that the surplus of such rents, issues, and profits from time to time accruing to the said ecclesiastical commissioners shall be carried to the general fund under the administration of the said commissioners, who shall have all and every the like powers of leasing and demise the lands and tithes so vesting in them as such corporations may now respectively have, and be in all respects subject to such and the like restrictions and conditions.

"XXVI. And whereas by the herein before-recited act passed in the fourth and fifth years of his majesty's reign the lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland, and his majesty's privy council there, are empowered, on the recommendation of the said ecclesiastical commissioners, to order and direct that the appointment to any ecclesiastical dignity or office under the rank of an archbishopric or bishopric, the person holding which shall not have actual care of souls within any parish appropriated thereto, shall be suspended upon the next avoidance until such lord lieutenant and council shall think fit otherwise to direct, and that for and during such period as such dignity or office shall remain vacant all and every the tithes, glebes, lands, rents, profits, and emoluments whatsoever belonging or appertaining thereto, and all arrears of such tithes, rents, profits, and emoluments which may have accrued due since the same may have become void as aforesaid, shall be vested in and received by the said ecclesiastical commissioners, to be by them applied towards the like purposes as the other monies and funds accruing to or vested in them under the provisions of the said act: and whereas doubts have arisen whether the provisions of the said act apply to the case of the precentorship of the church of the holy and undivided Trinity, otherwise called Christ Church, in Dublin, now vacant, by reason of the cure of souls in certain parishes belonging in contemplation of law to the said precentor, although in fact such cure has not been served by the occupant of such dignity, nor by any resident curate employed at a sufficient stipend; and whereas it is expedient to remove such doubts, and also further to explain the said act; be it therefore enacted, that the herein before-recited provisions of the said act shall be taken to extend to the said precentorship, and also to all dignities or offices the occupants whereof, although having in contemplation of law cure of souls, habitual or actual, in any parish or parishes appropriated or in anywise belonging thereto, shall not for three years next preceding the first day of January last have continuously served the cure of souls in such parish or parishes, either personally or by a curate licensed thereto, or in case the appointment, presentation, or collation of any clerk to such parish or parishes shall have been suspended or hereafter shall be suspended under and by virtue of the said recited act of the third and fourth years of his present majesty's reign; and also that the said provisions of the said act shall be taken to extend to all such offices or belonging to cathedral churches as in the said act mentioned, although the same may not be ecclesiastical offices nor held by ecclesiastical persons, and also to all cases where tithes may have been held or enjoyed by the occupants of such dignities or offices, though not in law appropriated to them, and also to cases where lands only, or land as well as tithes, may have been so held and enjoyed or appropriated, or where the same may be under lease: provided always, that if it shall appear to the said ecclesiastical commissioners that there are any curates, perpetual or stipendiary, serving the cure of souls within any parish appropriated to any such dignity or office, and that the stipends allowed to such curates are insufficient, then and in such case it shall be lawful for the said ecclesiastical commissioners, from and out of the profits or emoluments of the parish so appropriated, to allow such stipend to any such curate, not exceeding one hundred pounds per annum, as they may think necessary with regard to the duties to be by him discharged.

council to order that such rectory, vicarage, tithes or portions of tithes, or land or part or parts thereof, so disappropriated, disunited, and divested as aforesaid, shall be transferred to the said ecclesiastical commissioners; and the right and interest in and to the same, and all arrears thereof, shall thereupon vest in the said ecclesiastical commissioners, and be by them carried to the general fund under their administration, but charged with and subject nevertheless to the payment of such annual or periodical sum or sums of money, if any, as the said lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors and council shall think fit to direct to be paid to any rector, vicar, or curate, their or his successors, whose rectory, vicarage, or curacy he and they shall deem not to be sufficiently endowed, or which he and they may think fit to erect, and to which, under the provisions of the said act, any such disappropriated rectory, vicarage, tithes or portions of tithes, or lands, might have been appropriated and united.

"XXIX. And be it enacted, that the said ecclesiastical commissioners shall have all such and the like powers of making or renewing leases, or of conveying a perpetual estate or interest of and in any lands or premises which may become vested in them by virtue of any such disappropriation order as aforesaid, as heretofore conferred upon them in respect of any lands or premises which may become vested in them by virtue of any such suspension order as hereinbefore mentioned; and all and every the provisions hereinbefore contained in respect of such lands or premises as may be vested in the said commissioners by any such suspension order, and the making leases and renewals and conveyances thereof, shall apply and extend to lands or premises vested in them by any such disappropriation order, and be making leases, renewals, and conveyances thereof.

"XXX. Whereas by reason of the insufficiency of the endowment of the vicarages in several parishes the rectorial tithes whereof are appropriated to archbishops, bishoprics, and other ecclesiastical dignities, prebends, and canonries, in Ireland, by reason whereof it has become necessary from time to time to unite two or more of such vicarages into one benefice, to the disadvantage of the spiritual interests and concerns of such vicarages respectively; be it therefore enacted, that from and after the passing of this act it shall not be lawful for the said ecclesiastical commissioners acting in pursuance of the provisions of said recited acts, in the same and on the behalf of any archbishop, bishop, dignity, prebendary, or canon, to grant a perpetual estate or interest to any tenant now holding or who may hereafter hold any tithes or compositions for tithes appropriated to such archbishopric, bishopric, dignity, prebend, or canonry, under or by virtue of any lease or contract.

"XXXI. And be it further enacted, that at any time from and after the next avoidance of any archbishopric, bishopric, dignity, prebend, or canonry as aforesaid, in which it may be deemed expedient so to do, it shall and may be lawful for the said ecclesiastical commissioners, in case any tithes or compositions for tithes shall be disappropriated therefrom, by instrument under their common seal to declare that the lease or contract by which such tithes or compositions for tithes are now or hereafter may be held shall not be renewed; and in order to prevent any lease or bargain to the tenant or tenants now holding or who may hereafter hold such tithes or compositions for tithes by virtue of such lease or contract, by reason of the same not being capable of being renewed as heretofore, it shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners, upon the application of any such tenant or tenants declaring his or their readiness to accept the value in money of his or their estate or interest in such lease or contract as if the same were still capable of renewal, to estimate and compute the value thereof accordingly; and in case such tenant or tenants shall think fit to accept the same, he or they shall thereupon convey his estate and interest in such lease or contract to the said ecclesiastical commissioners, and such tithes or compositions for tithes shall thereupon be freed and discharged from all debts, liabilities, and incumbrances, of such tenant or tenants, or of any person or persons deriving under him, her, or them, or of any person or persons under whom he, she, or they may derive: provided nevertheless, that the purchase money for such estate and interest shall become subject and liable to all such and the like “XXXIII. And whereas, by and under the provisions of the said recited act of the third and fourth years of his present majesty's reign, the bishopric of Cork and Ross has become united to the bishopric of Cloyne, and Doctor Samuel Kyle being at the time of the passing of the said act, and at the time when the said bishoprics became united as aforesaid, bishop of Cork and Ross, has become and now is bishop of the said united bishoprics of Cork and Ross and Cloyne: and whereas upon such union as aforesaid all and singular the lands, tenements, and hereditaments, with all and singular the tithes, rents, and emoluments, appertaining or belonging to the said bishopric of Cork and Ross, were by virtue of the said act transferred to and vested in the said ecclesiastical commissioners, saving and excepting the see-house and offices and mensal and demesne lands to the said bishopric of Cork and Ross belonging, which became thereafter by the said act the see-house and offices and mensal or demesne lands of the said united bishoprics of Cork and Ross and Cloyne, and the said Doctor Samuel Kyle became possessed of and entitled to the revenues of the said bishopric of Cloyne, saving and excepting to the see-house and mensal or demesne lands thereunto belonging, which the said ecclesiastical commissioners were authorized to let or demise for such rent or fine as they should think fit: and whereas the said ecclesiastical commissioners are authorized and required by the said act, out of the revenues of the said bishopric of Cork and Ross so vested in them as aforesaid, to make good to the said Doctor Samuel Kyle the sum or sums of money, if any, whereby the revenues of the said bishopric of Cloyne shall fall short of the revenues of the said bishopric of Cork and Ross: and whereas the revenues of the said respective bishoprics, being in great measure dependent on fines paid on the renewal of leases, are liable to uncertainty and variation, and an annual valuation of the said several bishoprics would be troublesome and inconvenient: and whereas it has been found, upon a comparison of the relative average value of the said several bishoprics, that the revenues of the said bishopric of Cloyne fall short of the revenues of the said bishopric of Cork and Ross by the annual sum of one thousand five hundred pounds, or thereabouts, and the said Doctor Samuel Kyle consents to receive such annual sum of one thousand five hundred pounds in full acquittance and discharge of the payment which the said ecclesiastical commissioners ought to make to him under the provisions of the said act; be it therefore enacted, that the said annual sum of one thousand five hundred pounds shall be deemed and taken to be the sum whereby the revenues of the said bishopric of Cloyne fall short of the revenues of the said bishopric of Cork and Ross, and that the said ecclesiastical commissioners shall pay to the said Doctor Samuel Kyle, in each and every year during his incumbency of the said united bishoprics of Cork and Ross and Cloyne, the said annual sum of one thousand five hundred pounds, commencing from the fourteenth day of September one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, and that the first payment thereof shall be made on on the fourteenth day of September in this current year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, by one entire payment, and that the future payments thereof shall be made by equal moieties, one moiety on the fourteenth day of March, and the other moiety on the fourteenth day of September, in each and every succeeding year during the incumbency of the said Doctor Samuel Kyle, in the said united bishoprics: provided always, that the said annual payment shall be apportioned so as to be paid in such manner that on the demise or translation of the said Doctor Samuel Kyle, or other determination of his said incumbency, the said ecclesiastical commissioners shall pay to him, or his executors, administrators, or assigns, a proportion of such annual sum according to the time which shall have elapsed from the commencement or last period of payment thereof respectively, (as the case may be,) including the day of the demise or translation of the said Doctor Samuel Kyle, or other determination of his said incumbency in the said united bishoprics: provided also, that the income of the present Bishop of Cork and Ross and Cloyne during his incumbency be free from the tax chargeable under the provisions of the said recited act of the third and fourth years of the reign of his present majesty.

“XXXIV. And whereas it is provided by the said act of the fourth and fifth years of the reign of his present majesty, that no sum shall be paid by the said ecclesiastical commissioners to any attorney or solicitor as and for costs, charges, or expenses, unless the amount of such payment shall first have been approved of by the lords of the treasury, and that no sum exceeding one thousand pounds shall be allowed in any one year by the lords of the treasury as and for the costs, charges, or expenses of any such attorney or solicitor, and that before any such sum shall be allowed by the said lords commissioners of the treasury on such account as aforesaid the particulars of all such costs and expenses shall be laid before them: and whereas it is necessary to explain the said hereinbefore recited provision; be it therefore hereby enacted and declared to be the intent and meaning of the said act, that no sum exceeding one thousand pounds shall be allowed in any one year for the personal services of any such attorney or solicitor, but that no disbursements or expenses actually and properly made or incurred by such attorney or solicitor in and about the affairs and business of the said ecclesiastical commissioners, and by their authority and direction, shall be deemed or taken to be included in the said sum of one thousand pounds, or form part thereof.

“XXXV. And be it further enacted, that the said several recited acts of parliament shall continue in full force and effect, save and except so far as they or either of them are or is expressly repealed or altered by this act, and that the said recited acts and this act shall be construed and taken together as one act to all intents and purposes; and that this act may be altered, amended, or repealed by any act or acts to be passed in the present session of parliament.

“XXXVI. And whereas it is enacted by the said first-recited act, that in all cases where, under and by virtue of an act made in the twenty-first of the reign of King George the Second, intituled, ‘An Act for disappropriating Benefices belonging to Deans, Archdeacons, Dignitaries, and other Members of Cathedral Churches, and for appropriating others in their stead, and also for the Removal of the Sites of ruined Cathedral Churches,’ any parochial church shall have been or shall be made or shall become by usage or custom cathedral and parochial, and in all cases where, under and by virtue of an act made in the parliament of Ireland in the thirty-ninth year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled, ‘An Act for the repairing of Cathedral Churches in Cases where the Parish Churches have been long in Ruins,’ any cathedral church shall have been or shall be made as of as a parish church, it shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners and they are thereby required to contribute to the repairs of such cathedral and parochial churches in such proportion as has been agreed upon by and between the dean and chapter or chapters of such cathedral church, and by the protestant inhabitants of the parish or union in which such church is situate, that the inhabitants thereof should contribute to the rebuilding, enlarging, and putting into and keeping Provided also, and be it further enacted, that in case any such lands shall have been taken or used at any time before the passing of this act for the erection of a school-house or school-houses, or the appurtenances thereto, or for other charitable purposes, such lands so taken, or the erections made thereon, shall not be deemed to be of the nature of an encroachment within the meaning of this act.

XXX. And whereas the allotments made to any rector or vicar who may be entitled to any glebe lands in such open and common arable, meadow, or pasture, or fields, or some of such allotments, may probably require some additional divisions, by reason whereof, and in order to render the same of greater value to the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors, it may be necessary that some buildings should be erected thereon, and some necessary divisions as well as interior or subdivision fences may be necessary to be made, planted, raised in and upon the said allotments or some of them: and whereas the making of such further buildings, and the making, planting, and raising such divisions, will be attended with considerable expense, and as the same will probably be beneficial to the successors of such rectors and vicars respectively then to be rector and vicar in whose incumbency such allotment and inclosure may take place; be it therefore further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful to and for the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors, by and with the consent in writing of the respective patrons of the said rectories and vicarages, and the ordinary of the diocese for the time being, to erect or cause to be erected for utilitarian purposes such further buildings upon the allotment or allotments, or on buildings the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors, are hereby required to cause to be insured equal to the value thereof (as ascertained in some of the offices in London established for insurance against fire,) or to be set out unto the said rectors and vicars and their respective successors as aforesaid, and also to make, plant, and raise such outer division as well as interior or subdivision fences in and upon the said allotment or allotments as the said commissioner or commissioners shall judge necessary and proper for the occupation of the lands so to be allotted to the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors, and by any deed or deeds, writing or writings, under the respective hand and seal of such rectors or vicars respectively, and their respective successors, and attested by two or more credible witnesses, by and with the consent in writing of the bishop of the diocese for the time being, to charge such allotment or allotments so as aforesaid to be set out for the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors as aforesaid, and the buildings so to be erected thereon, with such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole two years' annual value of the respective allotments so to be set out to the said rectors and vicars respectively, as the said commissioners shall think necessary for the purposes of and in order to be applied to paying and defraying the charges and expenses of erecting the said further buildings, and of making, planting, or raising such division or subdivision fences, or for either of the said purposes, and in applying for and obtaining the consent of the said bishop, and in exercise of the powers given to and vested in the said rectors and vicars respectively by virtue of this act and the said recited act; which sum or sums of money shall be paid to such person or persons as the said commissioners shall nominate and appoint, in order to be applied or disposed of accordingly; and for securing the repayment of such sum or sums of money, with interest for the same, to grant, mortgage, lease, or demise the allotments so as aforesaid to be set out unto and for the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors, as aforesaid, and the buildings so to be erected thereon, unto such person or persons who shall advance and lend the same, his, her, and their executors, administrators, or assigns, for any term or number of years, so that every such grant, mortgage, lease, or demise be made with a proviso to cease and be void, or with an express trust to be surrendered, when the sum or sums of money thereby to be secured, with the interest thereof, shall be respectively fully paid and satisfied; and such mortgagee or mortgagees advancing and lending the money so to be borrowed shall not be obliged to see to the application or be in anywise answerable for the misapplication of such monies or any part thereof; and the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors for the time being, shall be and are hereby required and made liable, at the end of every year after the date of such mortgage, to pay to the person or persons to whom such grant, mortgage, lease, or demise shall be made, his, her, or their executors, administrators, or assigns, one thirtieth part of the respective principal monies so to be borrowed, until the whole thereof shall by such annual payments be paid off and discharged, and also to pay and keep down the interest of the said respective monies so to be borrowed, so that the future rectors and vicars of the said respective parishes or townships becoming possessed of such respective lands and fields shall not be subject or liable (and they are hereby respectively discharged from being subject or liable) to pay any further or larger share of such monies than his or their proportion thereof according to such last-mentioned condition, or any interest for the same save only from the day of the death, resignation, or cession of the preceding incumbent of the said rectories or vicarages respectively; and that it shall and may be lawful to and for the person or persons who shall advance and lend such monies, his, her, or their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for the more easily recovering the said one thirtieth part of the said principal and the whole of the interest which is enacted annually to be paid, to have, use, exercise, and take such and the same powers and remedies, by entry and distress upon the premises so to be charged, mortgaged, and demised, and sale of such distress, as by the laws now in force are provided for and given to landlords, or as they can use and take for the recovery of rack rents in arrear.

"XXXI. And be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the rectors of the said rectories and the vicars of the said vicarages respectively for the time being, by indentures under their respective hands and seals, with the consent and approbation of the bishop of the diocese for the time being, and of the patron of the said rectories and vicarages, from time to time to lease and demise all or any

I. Provided always, and be it further enacted, that the lands, grounds, or premises which shall be allotted or exchanged by virtue of this act shall be in the same manner, under and by virtue of the same terms and rents, and shall be deemed to be of the same quality and tenure, as the lands, tenements, or premises in respect of which such allotment or allotments or exchanges were held or deemed to be of immediately before the making of such allotment or exchange respectively; provided always, that when the lands or fields agreed to be allotted or inclosed under the provisions of this act belong to different persons or do not extend over the whole of any manor lands or fields it shall be lawful for the commissioners or commissioners to apportion the tithes as well as the land, in order that all persons may have their allotments in lieu of lands which were before exempted from tithes."

- "Whereas by an act made in the last session of parliament, intituled, 'An Act for Marriages in England,' and by another act, intituled, 'An Act for registering Births, Deaths, and Marriages in England,' sundry provisions were made for the duties of superintendent registrars and also of registrars and deputy registrars of births, deaths, and marriages, which several provisions require to be further explained and amended: and whereas the recited acts require amendment in other respects, be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commoners in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that where in the said act for marriages in England provision is made for giving notice of marriage to any registrar, and where in the last recited act, or any schedule thereunto annexed, mention is made of any such notice, or of the registrar's certificate of any such notice, the same shall be construed respectively to mean the notice to be given to the superintendent registrar, and the certificate thereof to be issued by the superintendent registrar, according to the provisions for that purpose contained in the last recited act.
- "II. And whereas by the said act for registering births, deaths, and marriages, it is provided, that in the case of any child to which any name shall be given in baptism after its birth shall have been registered under the provisions of the said act, a certificate shall be delivered in manner provided by the said act, signed by the minister who shall have performed the rite of baptism, and that the registrar shall certify upon the said certificate the additional entry in the register book thereupon required by the said act to be made, and shall forthwith send the said certificate through the post-office to the registrar-general; be it enacted, that the certificate that such additional entry has been made shall be made and sent as aforesaid by the registrar or superintendent registrar, as the case may be, to whom the minister's certificate shall have been delivered, according to the provisions of the said act.
- "III. And be it enacted, that every superintendent registrar who shall knowingly and wilfully issue any licence for marriage after the expiration of three calendar months after the notice shall have been entered by the superintendent registrar, as provided by the said act for marriages, or who shall knowingly and wilfully solemnize or permit to be solemnized in his office any marriage in the last recited act declared to be null and void, shall be guilty of felony.
- "IV. And whereas in that part of the said act for registering births, deaths, and marriages in England which provides for the recovery of penalties, the word 'offender' has been once inserted by mistake instead of the word 'offence'; be it enacted, that in all cases in which any justices are by the last recited act authorised to imprison any offender against the last recited act, the place of imprisonment shall be the common gaol or house of correction for the county, city, or place where the offence shall be committed.

"V. And be it enacted, that for the purpose of enabling any person to recover costs and damages in any action, as provided by the said act for marriages, from any person who shall have entered a caveat on frivolous grounds with the superintendent registrar, a copy of the declaration of the registrar-general purporting to be sealed with the seal of the general register office shall be evidence that the registrar-general has declared such caveat to have been entered on frivolous grounds, and that they ought not to obstruct the grant of the licence or issue of the certificate, as the case may be; and such declaration shall have the effect of the declaration required in such case by the said act for marriages.

"VI. And whereas it hath been doubted, under the provisions of the said act for registering births, deaths, and marriages in England, when the registration of the births and deaths of persons born and dying at sea ought to begin; be it enacted, that the marine register books shall begin with the birth and death respectively which shall happen of persons born or dying at sea after the last day of June, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, and of which a certificate shall be first sent to the registrar-general according to the provisions of the last recited act, and shall not contain any registry of the birth or death of any person born or dying at sea before the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven.

"VII. And be it enacted, that the registrar-general may receive and send by the general post from and to all ports and places in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, all letters and packets relating exclusively to the execution of the said acts for marriages, and for registering births, deaths, and marriages, or of this act, free from the duty of postage, subject to the provisions and conditions of the said act for registering births, deaths, and marriages, with respect to letters and packets so received or sent by him from and to places in England.

"VIII. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the registrar-general, if he shall think fit, to direct that the place of birth or death of any person whose birth or death shall be registered under the said act for registering births, deaths, and marriages, shall be added to the entry in such manner as the registrar-general shall direct; and such addition, when so made, shall be taken to all intents to be part of the entry in the register.

"IX. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the registrar-general, with the consent of the poor law commissioners, to direct that any place lying wholly within but not being part of any union, parish, or place for which a board of guardians shall have been established under the provisions of an act passed in the fourth and fifth years of his late majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales,' shall be part of any one or more registrar's districts within such union, parish, or place, and within the superintendence of the superintendent registrar thereof, or if not lying wholly within any one such union, parish, or place as last aforesaid, then to be for those purposes annexed to such union, parish, or place as last aforesaid, as the registrar-general, with the consent of the poor law commissioners, shall direct.

"X. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the registrar-general, if he shall see fit, with the approval of one of her majesty's principal secretaries of state, to unite any two or more unions, parishes, or places for which a board of guardians shall have been established under the act last aforesaid, or any two or more superintendent registrar's districts, into one superintendent registrar's district; and in every such case of union the registrar-general shall declare by which board of guardians the superintendent registrar shall thenceforward be appointed; and the superintendent registrar of the union, parish, or place for which such board is established shall from the time of such union be the sole superintendent registrar of such united district; and every provision of the said acts for marriages, and for registering births, deaths, and marriages, relating to superintendent registrars, and “XV. And be it enacted, that the registrar-general shall have power, subject to the approval of the commissioners of the Treasury, to appoint by writing under his hand a fit person to act as his assistant in the case of the illness of the registrar-general; and every such assistant, while so acting, shall have all the powers and duties and be subject to all the provisions and penalties declared by the said acts for marriages, and for registering births, deaths, and marriages, in England, and by this act, or any of them; except that such assistant shall not have power to make or declare any general rule, or to rescind or alter any order, regulation, or approval signified and made by the registrar-general in writing under his hand, or to dismiss any person from any office holden during the pleasure of the registrar-general.

“XVI. And be it enacted, that every superintendent registrar shall have the power, subject to the approval of the registrar-general, to appoint by writing under his hand a fit person to act as his deputy in case of the illness or absence of such superintendent registrar; and every such deputy superintendent registrar, while so acting, shall have all the powers and duties and be subject to all the provisions and penalties declared by the said acts for marriages, and for registering births, deaths, and marriages, in England, and by this act, concerning superintendent registrars; and in case of the death of the superintendent registrar shall act as superintendent registrar until another be appointed; and every superintendent registrar shall be civilly responsible for the acts and omissions of his deputy.

“XVII. And be it enacted, that whenever there are two or more clerks to the guardians of any union, parish, or place, established under the provisions of the said act for amending the laws relating to the poor, one only of whom shall possess such qualifications as the registrar-general by any general rule hath declared or shall declare to be necessary, or one only of whom shall think fit to accept the office of superintendent registrar of such union, parish, or place, such one shall be the superintendent registrar of such union, parish, or place; and if two or more of such clerks shall possess such qualifications as aforesaid, and be willing to accept such office, then such guardians shall elect and choose one of such clerks (possessing such qualifications as aforesaid) to be the superintendent registrar of such union, parish, or place; and that no other person shall be or be elected or appointed to be superintendent registrar of any such union, parish, or place, unless all the clerks to the board of guardians (possessing such qualifications as aforesaid) shall not think fit to accept such office.

“XVIII. And be it enacted, that every registrar of births and deaths, and every registrar of marriages appointed under the provisions of the said acts or either of them, shall be freed and exempted from being returned and from serving on any jury or inquest, and from every parochial and corporate office whatever.

“XIX. And be it enacted, that for better enabling fit register offices to be provided, it shall be lawful for any such board of guardians to borrow money for that purpose, and to charge the amount of the sum borrowed on the future poor rates of the parish, union, or place of which they are the guardians, in the manner provided by the said act for amending the laws relating to the poor with respect to monies borrowed for building workhouses for the relief of the poor; save only that the yearly instalments by which any money borrowed as aforesaid shall be repaid shall not be less than one twentieth of the sum borrowed, with interest on the same, and need not be more in any one year.

“XX. And be it enacted, that in any case in which any such board of guardians shall neglect or refuse to provide and uphold a register office according to the provisions of the said act for registering births, deaths, and marriages, it shall be lawful for the commissioners of the Treasury, or any three of them, on the application of the registrar-general, to give directions for providing and upholding the same, and to expend a sum not exceeding three hundred pounds in providing the same, and also all sums needful for the repair and maintenance thereof from time to time, in case the guardians shall continue to refuse or neglect to repair and

XXI. And be it enacted, that until a register office shall be provided in any superintendent registrar's district, the superintendent registrar shall appropriate his room or rooms to be approved by the registrar-general, as the superintendent registrar's office of that district.

XXII. And be it enacted, that the registrar-general shall be authorized to fix from time to time the number of registrars of marriage to be appointed by any superintendent registrar; and no superintendent registrar shall have power to appoint more than the number so fixed for him to appoint.

XXIII. And be it enacted, that the registrar-general, under the direction of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, shall take order that the solemn declaration and form of words provided to be used in the case of marriages under the said act shall be truly and exactly translated into the Welsh tongue, and shall cause the same so translated to be furnished to every registrar of marriages throughout Wales, and in all places where the Welsh tongue is commonly used; and it shall be lawful to use the declaration and form of words so translated, and published by authority, in all places where the Welsh tongue is commonly used or read, in such manner and form and to the same intents and purposes as by the said act is prescribed in the English tongue.

XXIV. And whereas by the said act for marriages in England, provision is made for the transmission of notices of marriage to the clerk to the guardians of the poor, or of the parish or place comprising the district of a superintendent registrar, and for the reading of the same at certain meetings of such guardians: and whereas it may happen in certain superintendent registrar's districts that there may be no such guardians; be it therefore enacted, that in every such district, but only until the election of such board of guardians and of a clerk to the board, every notice of marriage given according to the provisions of the said act, or a true and exact copy thereof, under the hand of the superintendent registrar, shall be suspended in some conspicuous place in the office of the superintendent registrar during seven successive days, if the marriage is to be solemnized by licence, or twenty-one successive days if the marriage is to be solemnized without licence, before any marriage shall be solemnized in pursuance of the said act; and the particulars of every such notice shall be sent by the superintendent registrar to every registrar of marriages within his district, and shall be open to the inspection of every one who shall apply at reasonable times to such registrar to inspect the same.

XXV. And whereas by the said act for registering births, deaths, and marriages, it is provided that the cost of all marriage register books and forms for certified copies thereof, furnished to the rector, vicar, or curate of every church and chapel in England wherein marriages may lawfully be solemnized, shall be paid by the churchwardens and overseers of the parish or chapelry out of the monies coming to their hands as such churchwardens or overseers, and that the cost of register books and of register books of deaths, and of forms for certified copies thereof, shall be paid by the guardians or by the churchwardens and overseers, (as the case may be,) out of the monies coming to their hands or control as such guardians or churchwardens and overseers; be it enacted, for removing doubt as to the true intent and meaning therewith, that the cost of all such books and forms shall be borne by the rector, vicar, or curate, or by the churchwardens and overseers, of the parish, or place in and for which the superintendent registrar is appointed, or to whose superintendence the registrar for whose use such books were provided, or to whose jurisdiction the registrar is by the said act directed to deliver one copy of such notices; and such cost shall be paid to the said superintendent registrar by the rector, vicar, or curate, or by the churchwardens and overseers, as the case shall be, out of the monies coming into their hands as such guardians or such churchwardens and overseers for the relief of the poor.

"XXVI. And be it enacted, that the certified copies of the entries of births, deaths, and marriages, required by the said acts for marriages, and for registering births, deaths, and marriages, or by an act passed in this session of parliament, intituled, 'An Act to suspend for a limited time the Operation of two Acts passed in the last Session of Parliament for registering Births, Deaths, and Marriages in England, and for Marriages in England,' to be made and delivered to the superintendent registrar, and also the certificates to be made and delivered to the superintendent registrar that there has been no birth, death, or marriage, registered since the delivery of the last certificate, shall in every case be made up and refer respectively to the last days of March, June, September, and December then next preceding, and not to the time of the making or delivery of such certified copy or certificate when made on any subsequent day.

"XXVII. And whereas it is required by the said act for registering births, deaths, and marriages, that every rector, vicar, and curate shall register in duplicate the particulars of every marriage solemnized by him, one of which registers he is also required to deliver when filled to the superintendent registrar of the district in which such church or chapel may be situated, and also four times in every year to deliver to the said superintendent registrar a true copy, certified by him under his hand, of all the entries of marriages in the register book kept by him since the last certificate; be it enacted, that the said superintendent registrar shall pay or cause to be paid to the said rector, vicar, or curate, the sum of sixpence for every entry contained in such certified copy, which sum shall be reimbursed to the said superintendent registrar by the guardians or overseers of the union, parish, or place for which he shall be appointed superintendent registrar as aforesaid, in like manner as by the said act is provided for the payment of the registrar on production of his accounts to the superintendent registrar.

"XXVIII. And be it enacted, that every person who under the provisions of the said acts for marriages, and for registering births, deaths, and marriages, or either of them, as amended by this act, is required to make and deliver to any superintendent registrar a certified copy of the entries of any births, deaths, or marriages registered by him, or the certificate required by the said acts as amended by this act that there have been no entries since the last certificate, and who after being duly required to deliver such certified copy or such certificate as aforesaid shall refuse or during one calendar month neglect so to do, shall be liable for every such offence to forfeit a sum not exceeding ten pounds, to be recovered as other penalties for offences against the said acts are made recoverable: provided always, that in such case a moiety of the penalty shall not go to the informer, but the whole shall go to the registrar-general, or such other person as the commissioners of the Treasury shall appoint, for the use of her majesty.

"XXIX. And be it enacted, that in every case in which any rector, vicar, or curate is required by either of the said acts for marriages, and for registering births, deaths, and marriages, or by this act, to give or deliver any notice, certificate, or certified copy to any superintendent registrar, it shall be sufficient for such rector, vicar, or curate to give or deliver the same to some registrar under the superintendence of such superintendent registrar; and every registrar on receiving any such notice, certificate, or certified copy shall give or deliver the same to the superintendent registrar; and each superintendent registrar shall direct the registrars of births and deaths under his superintendence quarterly or oftener if he shall think fit or shall be so ordered to do by the registrar-general to collect the notices, certificates, and certified copies from every rector, vicar, and curate within his district.

upon summary conviction by virtue of the said acts or this act shall be commenced within three months after the commission of such offence.

"XXXII. And be it enacted, that no stamp duty shall be required nor shall any duty be chargeable on any licence under the hand and seal of any bishop, or any other instrument necessary for authorizing the solemnization of marriages in any chapel according to the provisions of the said act for marriages.

"XXXIII. And be it enacted, that the banns of marriage of any persons may be published in any chapel licensed by the bishop, according to the provisions of the said act for marriages, for the solemnization of marriages, in which those persons might lawfully be married; and instead of the notice required by the said act the words 'banns may be published and marriages may be solemnized in this chapel' shall be placed in some conspicuous part in the interior of every such chapel.

"XXXIV. And whereas doubts may arise whether under the said recited acts it is lawful for the bishop to license chapels for marriages between parties one only of whom resides within the district specified in such licence; be it therefore enacted and declared, that all such licences shall be construed to extend to and authorize marriages in such chapels between parties one or both of whom is or are resident within the said district: provided always, that where the parties to any marriage intended to be solemnized after publication of banns shall reside within different ecclesiastical districts the banns for such marriage shall be published as well in the church or chapel wherein such marriage is intended to be solemnized as in the chapel licensed under the provisions of the said recited act for the other district within which one of the parties is resident, and if there be no such chapel then in the church or chapel in which the banns of such last-mentioned party might be legally published if the said recited act had not been passed.

"XXXV. And whereas certain provisions are made in the act, intitled, 'An Act for Marriages in England,' relating to the celebration of marriages in separate buildings; be it enacted, that any building which shall have been licensed and used during one year next before registration for public religious worship as a Roman catholic chapel exclusively shall be taken to be a separate building for the purpose of being registered for the celebration of marriages, notwithstanding the same shall be under the same roof with any other building, or shall form a part only of a building.

"XXXVI. And whereas it is enacted in the said recited act for marriages in England, that where by any law or canon in force before the passing of the said act it is provided that any marriage may be solemnized after publication of banns, such marriage may be solemnized in like manner on production of the registrar's certificate as thereafter provided; be it enacted, that the giving of notice to the superintendent registrar, and the issue of the superintendent registrar's certificate, as in the said act and by this act provided, shall be used and stand instead of the publication of banns to all intents and purposes where no such publication shall have taken place; and every parson, vicar, minister, or curate in England shall solemnize marriage after such notice and certificate as aforesaid in like manner as after due publication of banns: provided always, that the church wherein any marriage according to the rites of the church of England shall so be solemnized shall be within the district of the superintendent registrar by whom such certificate as aforesaid shall have been issued."

CLVI. STAT. 7 GULIELMI 4 & 1 VICTORIAE, c. 26. A.D. 1837.

"An Act for the Amendment of the Laws with respect to Wills."

"Be it enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the words and expressions hereinafter mentioned, which in their ordinary signification have a more confined or a different meaning, shall in this act, except where the nature of the provision or the context of the act shall exclude such construction, be interpreted as follows; (that is to say,) the word 'will' shall extend to a testament, and to a codicil, and to an appointment by will or by writing in the nature of a will in exercise of a power, and also to a disposition by will and testament or devise of the custody and tuition of any child, by virtue of an act passed in the twelfth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, intituled, 'An Act for taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries, and Tenures in capite and by Knights' Service, and Purveyance, and for settling a Revenue upon His Majesty in lieu thereof,' or by virtue of an act passed in the parliament of Ireland in the fourteenth and fifteenth years of the reign of King Charles the Second, intituled, 'An Act for taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries, and Tenures in capite and by Knights' Service,' and to any other testamentary disposition; and the words 'real estate' shall extend to manors, advowsons, messuages, lands, tithes, rents, and hereditaments, whether freehold, customary freehold, tenant right, customary or copyhold, or of any other tenure, and whether corporeal, incorporeal, or personal, and to any undivided share thereof, and to any estate, right, or interest (other than a chattel interest) therein; and the words 'personal estate' shall extend to leasehold estates and other chattels real, and also to monies, shares of government and other funds, securities for money, (not being real estates,) debts, choses in action, rights, credits, goods, and all other property whatsoever which by law devolves upon the executor (1) or administrator, and to any share or interest therein; and every word importing the singular number only shall extend and be applied to several persons or things as well as one person or thing; and every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend and be applied to a female as well as a male.

"II. And be it further enacted, that an act passed in the thirty-second year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, intituled, 'The Act of Wills, Wards, and Primer Seisins, whereby a Man may devise Two Parts of his Land;' and also an act passed in the thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth years of the reign of the said King Henry the Eighth, intituled, 'The Bill concerning the Explanation of Wills;' and also an act passed in the parliament of Ireland, in the tenth year of the reign of King Charles the First, intituled, 'An Act how Lands, Tenements, etc., may be disposed by Will or otherwise, and concerning Wards and Primer Seisins;' and also so much of an act passed in the twenty-ninth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, intituled, 'An Act for Prevention of Frauds and Perjuries,' and of an act passed in the parliament of Ireland in the seventh year of the reign of King William the Third, intituled, 'An Act for Prevention of Frauds and Perjuries,' as relates to devises or bequests of lands or tenements, or to the revocation or alteration of any devise in writing of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any clause thereof, or to the devise of any estate pur autre vie, or to any such estate being assets, or to nuncupative wills, or to the repeal, altering, or changing of any will in writing concerning any goods or chattels or personal estate, or any clause, devise, or bequest therein; and also so much of an act passed in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of Queen Anne, intituled, 'An Act for the Amendment of

But, where a will had been declared well proved in the court of Chancery after an order for an issue devoutur vel non, had been discharged on the petition of the heir at law, (also sole next of kin,) and her husband, and an annuity bequeathed to her regularly received during fourteen years, the Prerogative court of Canterbury refused, at the prayer of the heir at law and her husband, to call on the executors to prove that will in solemn form. *Merryweather v. the use of a will, and the testator shall not have surrendered the same to the use of his will, no person entitled or claiming to be entitled thereto by virtue of such will shall be entitled to be admitted, except upon payment of all such stamp duties, fees, and sums of money, as would have been lawfully due and payable in respect of the surrendering of such real estate to the use of the will, or in respect of presenting, registering, or enrolling, such surrender, if the same real estate had been surrendered to the use of the will of such testator: provided also, that where the testator was entitled to have been admitted to such real estate, and might, if he had been admitted thereto, have surrendered the same to the use of his will, and shall not have been admitted thereto, no person entitled or claiming to be entitled to such real estate in consequence of such will shall be entitled to be admitted to the same real estate by virtue thereof, except on payment of all such stamp duties, fees, fine, and sums of money, as would have been lawfully due and payable in respect of the admittance of such testator to such real estate, and also of all such stamp duties, fees, and sums of money, as would have been lawfully due and payable in respect of surrendering such real estate to the use of the will, or of presenting, registering, or enrolling, such surrender, had the testator been duly admitted to such real estate, and afterwards surrendered the same to the use of his will; all which stamp duties, fees, fine, or sums of money due as aforesaid shall be paid in addition to the stamp duties, fees, fine, or sums of money due or payable on the admittance of such person so entitled or claiming to be entitled to the same real estate as aforesaid.

“V. And be it further enacted, that when any real estate of the nature of customary freehold or tenant right, or customary or copyhold, shall be disposed of by will, the lord of the manor or reputed manor of which such real estate is holden, or his steward, or the deputy of such steward, shall cause the will by which such disposition shall be made, or so much thereof as shall contain the disposition of such real estate, to be entered on the court rolls of such manor or reputed manor; and when any trusts are declared by the will of such real estate, it shall not be necessary to enter the declaration of such trusts, but it shall be sufficient to state in the entry on the court rolls that such real estate is subject to the trusts declared by such will; and when any such real estate could not have been disposed of by will if this act had not been made, the same fine, heriot, dues, duties, and services shall be paid and rendered by the devisee as would have been due from the customary heir in case of the descent of the same real estate, and the lord shall as against the devisee of such estate have the same remedy for recovering and enforcing such fine, heriot, dues, duties, and services, as he is now entitled to for recovering and enforcing the same from or against the customary heir in case of a descent.

“VI. And be it further enacted, that if no disposition by will shall be made of any estate pur autre vie of a freehold nature, the same shall be chargeable in the hands of the heir, if it shall come to him by reason of special occupancy, as assets by descent, as in the case of freehold land in fee-simple; and in case there shall be no special occupant of any estate pur autre vie, whether freehold or customary freehold, tenant right, customary or copyhold, or of any other tenure, and whether a corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, it shall go to the executor or administrator of the party that had the estate thereof by virtue of the grant; and if the same shall come to the executor or administrator either by reason of a special occupancy or by virtue of this act, it shall be assets in his hands, and shall go and be applied and distributed in the same manner as the personal estate of the testator or intestate.

“VII. And be it further enacted, that no will made by any person under the age of twenty-one years shall be valid.

“VIII. Provided also, and be it further enacted, that no will made by any married woman shall be valid, except such a will as might have been made by a married woman before the passing of this act.

have signed the will, or have acknowledged his signature in the presence of two witnesses, present at the same time, and that they should have attested it in the presence of the testator, though not of each other. The interpretation which the court has put upon the section is, that the testator must sign or acknowledge his signature, before the witnesses attest, and that if the witnesses attest before the signature of the deceased is affixed to it, the will is not duly executed within the provisions of the act. The words of the section are very precise, and I think it would be attended with dangerous consequences, if the court were to hold a will valid which has been signed in the presence of two witnesses, who have attested it before the signature of the testator was affixed to the will; for where is the court to draw the line? Suppose the witnesses attested an hour before the testator signed, or a day, or a week, or any other time; where is the court to stop, if it gave a latitude of construction to this section of the act? Suppose it were one month, or six months, or a twelve-month, after the testator had signed the will; and whether it be, at the time of the transaction, or some time before, makes no difference. The words of the act are prospective, 'such witnesses shall attest, and shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator.' It does not appear to me, that the requisites of the act would be complied with, if the court were to hold that a testator might sign after the witnesses had subscribed, either at the same time, or two hours, or two weeks afterwards. I am, therefore, of opinion that, if it appear, from the evidence of the witnesses, and the res gestæ of the case, clear, that the will was signed by the testator, after the witnesses attested, it is not a good execution of the will"

In the Goods of Olding, (2 Curt. 865,) a motion for probate of a will, signed by the testator after the witnesses had subscribed their names, was rejected; and a motion for probate of a will which was signed by the deceased after the witnesses had subscribed their names, the witnesses having, subsequently to the signing by the deceased, placed seals opposite to their names, was also rejected, as in the Goods of James Byrd, 3 Ibid. 117.

(1) Or by some other person in his presence and by his direction.—Where a testator being too ill to sign his will, requested the drawer thereof to sign it for him, which he did in his own name, but not in the name of the testator: it was held to be sufficient. Sir Herbert Jenner remarking, "The statute allows a will to be signed for the testator by another person, and it does not say, that the signature must be in the testator's name; here, this gentleman, at the testator's request, signed the will for him, not in the testator's name, but using his own name. I incline to think, that this is a sufficient compliance with the act; the executrix is a good witness, but will lose her legacy." In the Goods of Clark, 2 Ibid. 329.

A will signed for the testator by one of the witnesses who attested the execution, was held to be valid, under Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9. In the Goods of Bailey, 1 Ibid. 914.

(2) And such signature shall be made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses.—The signature to a will, if acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two witnesses present at the same time, &c., is sufficient, whether the signature be made by the testator, or by another person for him. In the Goods of Regan, Ibid. 908.

A testator produced a will, in his own handwriting, with his name signed at the end thereof, to three persons, and requested them to put their names underneath his: it was held a sufficient acknowledgment of the signature, the court being satisfied, (although there was no express evidence of the fact,) that the signature was in the handwriting of the testator. Gaze v. Gaze, 3 Ibid. 451.

A will was written on three sides of a sheet of paper; on the fourth side was written a codicil. Both instruments were signed in the presence of, and attested by the same two witnesses, and at the same time; the witnesses were not informed of the fact, that they were attesting two separate instruments. The codicil to a great extent annulled the will: it was held, that this circumstance was not sufficient to discredit the will, it being proved to have been the voluntary act of a capable testatrix. Biddles v. Biddles, Ibid. 450.

In Keigwin v. Keigwin, (Ibid. 607,) it appeared, that a party showed a paper to two persons present at the same time, and requested them to sign it; both persons observed the signature of the party affixed to the paper, and both subscribed it in her presence. This paper, being a will, it was held to have been duly executed. Sir Herbert Jenner Fust stating, "The question comes to this, whether this will has been duly executed according to the requisites of the statute; the deceased did produce this paper having her signature affixed to it at the time, to two witnesses present at the same time, and the two witnesses did attest it in her presence; was this a sufficient acknowledgment? I am clearly of opinion that it was; it is not necessary, that the party should say in express terms, 'that is my signature;' it is sufficient, if it clearly appears that the signature was existent on the will when she produced it to the witnesses, and was seen by the witnesses when they did, at her request, subscribe the will. On these circumstances, I hold that this paper has been sufficiently executed."

Where a will was signed by the deceased after the attesting witnesses, (who were nude executors,) had signed; the defect was held to be cured by a regularly executed codicil on the same sheet, attested by the same witnesses. In the Goods of William Claringbull, 3 Eccles. Notes of Cases, 1.

discerning writing, it must be proved, that the will was read over to the deceased in the presence of witnesses, or, that he was otherwise acquainted with the contents. Fincham v. Edwards, 3 Curt. 63.

A testatrix signed her will, and on a subsequent day sent for two witnesses to attest the same; upon their arrival they said, that they were come for the purpose of signing their names as witnesses to her will, which was then produced, upon which the testatrix said, "I am glad of it, thank God;" and they subscribed the will as witnesses: it was held, to be an acknowledgment of her signature by the deceased, under Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9. In the Goods of Warden, 2 Ibid. 334.

Where the will of an aged testator, was prepared by a solicitor from instructions given by an executor and legatee in the will, the will not having been read over to the deceased, who did not sign the will in the presence of the attesting witnesses, but merely acknowledged his signature, it was pronounced for; there being no plea given in against the will, and nothing in the evidence to impeach the capacity of the deceased. Goose v. Brown, 1 Ibid. 707.

Positive affirmative evidence, by the subscribed witnesses, of the fact of signing or acknowledging the signature of a testator in their presence, is not absolutely essential to the validity of a will. The court may presume due execution by a testator upon the circumstances. Blake v. Knight, 3 Ibid. 547.

But where A. B. (deceased), requested two persons, present at the same time, "to sign a paper for him," which they did in his presence; the paper being so folded, that the witnesses did not see any writing whatever on it; and A. B. did not state, what was the nature of the paper in question: but on the death of A. B., it was found to be his intended will: it was held, that it was not entitled to probate, the provisions of the 9th section of Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, not having been complied with. Holt v. Genge, Ibid. 160.

In the Goods of Mary Harrison, (2 Ibid. 863,) probate was refused of a paper produced by the deceased, to three witnesses who subscribed their names thereto, two of the witnesses neither seeing the signature to the paper, nor knowing that it was signed, the third witness deposing, that she saw the signature of the deceased.

Where the deceased signed her will, not in the presence of witnesses, and subsequently produced her will before two witnesses, and said to them, "sign your names to this paper," it was held not to have been an acknowledgment of her signature under the 9th section of Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26. In the Goods of Rawlins, Ibid. 326.

In the Goods of Richard Simmonds, (3 Ibid. 79,) the deceased having signed his will, acknowledged the signature in the presence of one witness, who subscribed his name to the will, and on a subsequent day acknowledged the signature to another witness, who subscribed his name, the former witness being present at the time, who did not again subscribe his name; motion for probate was rejected.

In the Goods of Jane Sotherton, (2 Ibid. 831,) motion for probate of a paper as part of the will, it being referred to in the will, and signed by testatrix, was rejected, the paper not having been attested by the witnesses nor produced before them.

A testator, previous to the 1st of January, 1838, had made a will and several codicils, some duly executed, others only signed by the testator. Subsequently to the 1st of January, 1838, he made and signed a codicil (B), but the same was not duly attested. Subsequently to this, by a codicil (C), duly executed and attested, he ratified and confirmed his will and "codicils;" it was held, that the codicil (B) was not so identified with (C) as to be ratified by, or incorporated with (C), the word "codicils" being more completely and properly applicable to the codicils made previously to the 1st of January, 1838. Ferraris de Zichy (Consent of v. Hertford (Marquis of)), 3 Ibid. 468.

A testator, by will duly executed in the year 1823, directed his executors to pay legacies, which he should give by any testamentary writings signed by him, whether witnessed or not: it was held, that such clause could not give effect to legacies bequeathed by an unattested paper made subsequently to Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26. Ibid.

In Pennant v. Kingscote, (Ibid. 642) the will was pronounced against, both attesting witnesses, deposing against a signature according to the requisites of the 9th section of Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, and there being no circumstances on which the court could found a presumption, that the recollection of the witnesses was infirm on the subject.

The evidence of one witness, although omni exceptione major, is not sufficient to support a testamentary paper purporting to be duly executed and attested, where there are no adminicular circumstances tending to confirm it, and where the probabilities of the case incline against the factum of such an instrument. Mackenzie v. Yeo, Ibid. 125.

(1) Present at the same time.—A testator intending to execute a codicil, signed the same while lying in bed, there being present in the room the two witnesses who attested the codicil; the curtains at the foot of the bed being drawn at the time, one of the witnesses could not actually see the testator sign his name, nor could the testator see that the witness subscribed to the codicil as attesting it: it was held, that the testator and the witness signed their names in the presence of each other, as required by Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9. Newton v. Clarke, 2 Ibid. 320.

was allowed. In the Goods of Summash Here, 3 Curt. 54.

A paper was admitted to probate, on the testimony of one of the two attesting witnesses, although the other witness deposed, that it was not signed by the testator in his presence. The circumstances of the case inclining to favour the supposition of a due execution, e. g., a formal attestation clause; and the first witness having, in an affidavit sworn a few days after the will was made, deposed to the due execution, the second witness not having been examined until two years and a half afterwards. Gove v. Gove, 151.

Where one of the attesting witnesses to a will, having deposed that the will was attested in the presence of the testatrix, and the other that it was not, the court rescinded the conclusion of the cause, for the purpose of examining other witnesses who were present at the time. Young v. Richards, 2 Ibid. 373.

A testatrix produced a codicil, in her own handwriting, and with her signature made thereto, to two witnesses, present at the same time, who, at her request, made their marks thereto; the testatrix wrote the names of the witnesses opposite their respective marks, and, by mistake, a wrong surname to one of them. Probate was granted. In the Goods of Anne Ashmore, 3 Ibid. 756.

Where a will was not signed in the presence of witnesses, but the signature was virtually acknowledged, it was admitted to probate. In the Goods of William Philpot, 3 Eccles. Notes of Cases, 2.

In Moore v. King, (3 Curt. 243,) it appeared that a testator signed a codicil in the presence of a witness, (his sister,) who, at his desire, attested, and subscribed it. On a subsequent day, when his sister and another person were present, he desired her to bring him the codicil, and requested the other person present to attest and subscribe it, saying in the presence of both parties, and pointing to his signature, "This is a codicil signed by myself and my sister, as you see; you will oblige me if you will add your signature, two witnesses being necessary." That party then subscribed in the presence of the testator and of his sister, the latter, who was standing by him, pointing to her signature and saying, "There is my signature, you had better place yours underneath." She did not, however, re-subscribe: it was held, that the instrument was not sufficiently attested, under Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9. Sir Herbert Jenner First observing: "The question before the court is one of great importance with regard to the construction of the Will Act, (7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26.) It turns upon the due execution of a paper bequeathing personal property, which is now regulated by the same law as regulates the disposition of real property. The duty imposed upon the court is to find its way to a due and proper construction of the whole of the act; not of one single isolated clause, but of the entire intention of the legislature in passing the act. This case must form a leading case of its class; two other cases of a similar nature have been brought before the court, but only on ex parte motion; unfortunately they were cases, where the property involved in the decision was so small, as to render them unable to bear the expense of litigating the point. As far as I am able to judge, the present case differs in some respects from both those cases. In the case of Allen, (2 Ibid. 331,) the paper was attested by the one witness alone present on one day, the deceased having then signed it in her presence; on a subsequent day it was signed in the presence of a second witness, and attested by that witness in the presence of the first, but the first witness was not called on to attest the second execution. The court was of opinion that the execution was not sufficient. The other case of la re Simmonds, (3 Ibid. 79,) was very similar. In this case, as has been observed, there is this material distinction; the deceased having in the first instance signed the paper in the presence of his sister alone, does on a subsequent day acknowledge his signature in the presence of his sister, and his sister pointed out her signature to the second witness, but I do not understand that the deceased desired her to re-attest the acknowledgment of his signature. I admit all that has been said as to the construction of statutes, and the interpretation put upon the Statute of Frauds as to signing by the testator, but in the same interpretation applicable to the subscription of the witnesses? It has been argued, under the present statute, as against the admission of this allegation, that although this might have been a good subscription under the Statute of Frauds, it is not sufficient under the altered language of the present act; on the other side, it has been said, that a construction is to be put on this act the same as if on the Statute of Frauds; but it must be remembered, that the doubts expressed by judges of courts of law and equity on the Statute of Frauds, led to the introduction of the present act. It has been well said, that the 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, is not an original act, but an act to amend a former law; so it is;—it is an act to amend a former law, for removing all doubts whatever existing with regard to that law, and I find in the 9th section of the new act, a considerable departure from the language of the corresponding section (5th) of the Statute of Frauds. The language of the 9th section of 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. is expressly prohibitory, 'No will shall be valid unless it be in writing, and signed at the foot or end thereof,' clearly thereby intending to remove all doubts, in regard to the construction of the Statute of Frauds, as to signing by putting the testator's name at the beginning of the will; 'And such signature shall be made or acknowledged by the testator,' it had been formerly doubted, under the Statute of Frauds, whether an acknowledgment of the signature was sufficient, whether the will must not be actually signed in the presence of the witnesses; here again, all doubt is removed by the present section. Under the Statute of Frauds it had been held, that the witnesses need not be all present at the same time, the signature might be acknowledged to the three or more witnesses at different times; again, by the present act, all doubt on that at Berbice, was allowed to pass as that of a "soldier in actual military service," under Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 11, at the prayer of the party whose interest was prejudiced by such will.

A serjeant with his regiment at Malta, under orders for the West Indies, was, in the Goods of James Norris, (3 Eccles. Notes of Cases, 197,) held not to be a soldier in actual military service.

In Drummond v. Parish, (2 Ibid. 323,) Sir Herbert Jenner Pust observed, "This paper is all in the handwriting of the deceased; it is signed by him and sealed, but not attested; so that, under the general provisions of Stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, it is not entitled to probate. I say, 'under the general provisions' of the act, because it is contended that the paper contains a good and valid disposition of property, as coming within the exception of the 11th section, which, it has been argued, extends to soldiers of all degrees and under all circumstances, unless there may be a distinction between officers on full and those on half pay; otherwise, all persons belonging to the British army are to be considered as being on actual military service."

"Assuming this to be the construction of the statute, the effect would be to give a power of disposing of his personal property to every soldier on full pay, from the recruit of to-day to the oldest general in the service, not only by a writing unattested by witnesses, but by a will made by word of mouth. The exceptive clause in the present Will Act is the same as that in the Statute of Frauds, which first required that all wills of personal property should be in writing, and, therefore, this construction would give to all soldiers on full pay the power of disposing of property in any manner, by word of mouth, or by the most informal will. This is a most startling proposition, that it should be intended by the legislature to except from the operation of the present Will Act so large a body of persons as the British army consists of."

"It must be remembered that, as the exception was made at the time when the Statute of Frauds passed, (1676,) it must be considered with reference to the circumstances of that time, for the 11th section of the present act is only a continuation of the privilege granted to soldiers and mariners in the time of Charles the Second, and that, before the Statute of Frauds, a will might not only be made by word of mouth, but the most solemn will might be revoked by word of mouth: a will executed in the presence of witnesses might be revoked by parol. What would be the state in which the whole British army would be placed, if the exception contained in this clause were to have universal operation in that body? In the present case, the will is one which the court would be most anxious to support, if it can. It is holograph, and therefore not liable to the risk of being forged, as if it were a will in which only the signature were in the deceased's handwriting; it is written with great care; it was kept by the deceased in his private repository; there is no question that it is his act; the only question is, whether it is a will to which the law can give effect. But if this holograph paper, unattested, can be supported, the decision of the court must include less formal papers, and wills by parol, for it is only by showing that the exception extends to all classes of the army, and to all descriptions of testamentary disposition, that this paper can be supported. I much doubt whether, if this privilege could be maintained, it would be for the benefit of the army at large; it would expose them to all the mischiefs against which the Statute of Frauds and the present Will Act were intended to guard, if the court were to hold that every soldier on full or half-pay might make a will by parol, or in writing without witnesses. The court must, therefore, look into the principles intended to be adopted into this act, as well as into the Statute of Frauds."

"The words of the 11th section are: 'Any soldier being in actual military service, or any mariner or seaman being at sea, may dispose of his personal estate as he might have done before the making of this act.' These words, 'in actual military service,' must have some meaning; they cannot have been added to the word 'soldier' unless it were intended to impose some limitation as to the particular class of soldiers they applied to, otherwise it would be sufficient to have said 'any soldier in her majesty's service.' If the exception was intended to comprise all classes and all grades of persons in the service, the words 'in actual military service' are superfluous. The court must, therefore, endeavour to find some meaning for these words in the clause, and some reason for inserting them in the two statutes."

"In the elaborate arguments which have been addressed to the court, it was not referred to any case where this question has received a judicial decision, and, with the exception of a case to which I will presently advert, I am not aware of any decision on the point in respect to the will of a soldier. There have been decisions on the corresponding part of the clause, as to the wills of mariners at sea, and one case of this description was cited in the argument, that of Lord Hugh Seymour. Euston (Earl of) v. Seymour (Lord H.), 2 Curt. 339. One or two other cases of that kind have occurred; but, with the exception of the case I shall refer to, I am not aware that there have been any decisions on this part of the section, except on motion, where the court has granted probate of a will on a certificate from the war-office; and it has now become a matter of great importance to determine whether persons in the military service are, under all circumstances, entitled to come within the exception contained in the 11th section."

"It certainly is, and ought to be, a matter of some surprise that so few cases should have occurred since the Statute of Frauds, in which it was necessary to consider the effect of this exception; but I think the circumstance is accounted for by the general feeling that it is unsafe to trust to wills made by word of mouth, when the mode of disposing of personal property prescribed by the law was so simple and required so few solemnities, and when the making of a will by word of mouth afforded such opportunities for fraud and imposition, as well as misapprehension, and the paucity of cases may, I think, be fairly accounted for by this circumstance.

"Now, in the absence of all authority as to the construction of these words, how is their proper interpretation to be ascertained? It was observed in the argument, and as a general observation it is true, that, in construing a British act of parliament, very little light can be gained by resorting to other codes of law, and I assent to this, as a general observation. But there are and must be cases in our courts of law, in which the principle or doctrine of a particular clause appears of doubtful interpretation, and the wording of the act and the context do not appear in exact harmony, wherein foreign codes or systems of law must be resorted to. In this case, the section in question was borrowed from the civil law; this fact cannot be denied; it is admitted on all hands, and the court has been referred (by Dr. Twiss) to the Life of Sir Leoline Jenkins, who claimed some merit for having, in the preparation of the Statute of Frauds, obtained for the soldiers of the English army, and the mariners of our navy, the full benefit of the testamentary privileges of the Roman law, and an exemption from the necessity of executing a will in writing. Now, that exemption having been avowedly borrowed from the civil law, in order to show the manner in which it should be applied, and the extent to which the exception should operate, I think that code may be fairly resorted to, in order to see whether it was the intention of the legislature, in the Stat. 29 Car. 2, c. 3, and Stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, to adopt the same exception with some limitation as to the persons whom it was to include. It becomes necessary, therefore, to refer to the civil law, and the court has been referred in the argument, not only to the text of the code, but to commentators on the text, and it is well known that very nice and subtle distinctions are made by those learned writers. I shall not enter into a long disquisition on the different points which those commentators have treated of in their expositions of the law; yet I have looked into a great many of their comments, in order to see to what extent they considered the text law dispensed with, in respect to the testamentum militare; and, as far as I can collect from the commentators, the only difference is, whether the privilege extended to soldiers in quarters or in garrison, in stativis aut in hybernis, as well as elsewhere; but all agree, as far as appears, on one point, namely, that it was not every soldier who was entitled, under all circumstances, to this privilege; but that it was confined to those who were expeditionibus occupati, and the only difference which prevailed amongst the commentators seems to be, whether a soldier was to be considered in expeditione when in garrison or winter quarters, or whether the expedition was then at an end; all agree that he must be in expeditione. In its origin, the testamentary privilege extended to all soldiers; we have it positively so expressed in the 29th book of the Digest, tit. 'De Tes-tamento Militis,' and under the head 'De Origine Privilegii Militis,' (Dig. lib. xxix. tit. 1, l. 1.) wherein it is stated, (by Ulpian,) that the first full and free power of making a will was granted to soldiers by Julius Cæsar: 'Militibus liberam testamenti factionem primus quidem divus Julius Cæsar concessit.' This was the origin, according to many of the commentators, of the privilege of a soldier to make a will free from the necessity of having a certain number of witnesses to attest it, and other solemnities. The text goes on: 'Sed ea concessio temporalis erat. Postea vero primus Divus Titus dedit; post hoc, Domitianus; postea divus Nerva plenissimam indulgentiam in milites contulit; eamque et Trajanus secutus est; et exinde mandatis inseri cepit caput tale: and it quotes the chapter 'De Mandatis,' to show how very general the provision was in its first origin, and it continued so for some time after; the chapter is to this effect: 'Cum in nostram meam prolatum sit, subinde testamenta a commilitonibus relicta proferri que pueri in controversiam deduci, si ad diligentiam legum revocentur et observantiam; secutus animi mei integritudinem erga optimos excellentissimosque commilitones, simplicitati eorum consulendum existimavi; ut quoquoque testati fuissent, rata esset eorum voluntas. Faciant igitur testamenta quomodo vult, faciant quomodo poterint; sufficiatque ad bonorum suorum divisionem faciendam vera voluntas testatorum.' Nothing, therefore, can be clearer than that the privilege given to soldiers to make a will in any form extended to all ranks in the Roman army at this time. The interpretation which the Gloss. gives to the word 'simplicitas' is 'a want of knowledge,' the term used by Justinian, in the Institutes, ('Propter nimiam imperitiarum,' Lib. ii. tit. 11, s. 1.) being 'imperitia.' The Gloss. on the words 'nuda voluntas' is 'nisi domi sit; tunc enim jure communis tractari debet.' Therefore, according to the Gloss. on the text, there was an exception which confined the privilege to soldiers at home, where they were bound to conform to the general law. So stood the law at the time of the Digest. Various limitations were afterwards imposed. In the sixth book of the Code, (Codic. tit. 21, l. 11,) 'De testamento militis' is a passage which has no immediate bearing on the point the court is now discussing, but I cite it for the sake of the Gloss.: 'Quamquam militum testamentum a vinculis non subjiciantur, cum propter simplicitatem militarem;' the note in the Gloss. is, 'armatæ militiæ,' as if in contradistinction to 'togatæ.' The text goes on: 'Quod si velint, et quomodo possint, ea facere his concedatur: tamen in Valeriani quondam centurionis testamento instituto etiam jure communi accepit auctoritatem.' And the 17th law of the same title, headed, 'Quando noster testetur quomodo vult,' is as follows: 'Ne quidam putarent in omni tempore licere militibus testamenta quoquoque voluerint proponere; sancimus his solis qui in expeditionibus occupati sunt memoratum indulgentiam ultimas voluntates conficiendas benecivimus.' The Gloss. on 'expeditionibus occupati' is, 'in these words: 'Idque sive sint in castris, sive in fossato, sive in hybernis, sive in præsiidiis, sive in stativis, seu sedibus sedetis ac sedibus.' That is the Gloss. on the phrase 'expeditionibus occupati.' And it goes on: 'Sufficit ergo ut fiat in expeditione, licet non in prociectu; alioquin nihil aut parum distabit miles a pagano;' and reference is made to the 49th Consultation of Cujacius, which was cited in the argument, and it appears from his comment, that Cujacius was of opinion that the privilege extended to soldiers who were in castris and in stativis. He says, (Consult. xlix. Op. t. 1, 699, Ed. Par. 1658,) 'Quod autem queritur, an non aliter valeat testamentum jure militari quam si fiat in prociectu; respondeo, etiam si non fiat in prociectu testamentum valere jure militari, modo fiat in expeditione, in castris, in stativis;' so that it was not indispensable that the testament should be made in expeditione, but it might be made in castris and in stativis. He adds: 'Alioquin nihil distaret paganus a milite, nam et a pagano in prociectu, in acie, in hostico quoquomodo factum testamentum valet.' Now, according to this opinion, a soldier in camp or in winter quarters, might make a will without observing the solemnities of the law: 'modo fiat in expeditione, in castris, in stativis,' according to Cujacius; but whether the exception extended to soldiers in castris and in stativis, is a matter of doubt amongst commentators. I do not, however, consider that General Drummond was in castris or in stativis; the question is, whether he was in expeditione. Cujacius goes on: 'Ergo, qui in expeditione testatur miles, in castris, in fossato, ut loquuntur, imo et qui in hybernis, ut meum judicium est, in stativis, in præsiidiis, jure militari, testamentum facere potest. Ac proinde non est necesse ut adhibeat legitimum numerum testium, ut est in principio tituli "De militari testamento," in Institut. ubi et unum testem sufficere Theophilus noster scripsit. Et equidem nullum testem necessario requiro, ac satis esse opinor si alia probationibus legitimis constare possit de voluntate militis.' Therefore, a soldier, in those circumstances, might make a will without the solemnities of the law, but he must be in expeditione; otherwise, in his opinion, the will would not be good. The question, therefore, again arises, what was the 'expedition?' Calvin (Kahl), in his Lexicon Juridicum, (In vocibus, Ed. Genev. 1645,) thus explains the word: 'propriè, protectio cum expeditis militibus;' and the term 'expediti milites' he defines, 'vel in expeditionibus existentes dicuntur, quicunque sunt in ipso exercitu aut castris, id est, eo loco quo, rei-publice causa est belli apparatus, seu in statione illi sunt, seu in hybernis, seu alibi, pro finibus imperii tuendis: imo quocunque in loco sit militum causa, ut si Romæ sint ad defensionem urbis collocati ac dispositi;' so that they might be 'on an expedition' even when in Rome itself, if they were called out to defend the city. He goes on: 'Falsum ergo stationarios ac limonarchas non recte testaturos jure militari, quia non sint in expeditionibus.' Therefore, it was not strictly those alone who were actually on an expedition who might make a military will, but those who were at home, provided they were called out 'ad defensionem urbis.' And he refers for his authority to Ulpian, (De Bon. Possess. l. 1, s. ult.) 'Miles est,' he continues, 'etiam si in nostro non est; et nanarchi ac triarchi classium, jure militari testare possunt; et in classibus omnes remiges ac nautæ milites sunt; item et vigiles.'

"So far as we have gone, therefore, it is clear from the passages I have read from the Digest, and the Code, and the Comments, that the privilege did not extend to soldiers in every situation; that they must be in expeditione, or in castris, or in hybernis, or they must have been called out for the purpose of defending the city. Now we find by the second book of the Institutes, (Inst. lib. 2, tit. 11, s. 1,) which treats expressly of this subject, that the privilege was limited to persons in certain situations: 'Supradicta diligens observatio in ordinandis testamentis, militibus propter nimiam imperitiam eorum constitutionibus [principalibus] remissa est. Nam quamvis ii neque legitimum numerum testium adhibuerint, neque aliam testamentorum solennitatem observaverint; recte nihilominus testantur, videlicet, cum in expeditionibus occupati sunt; quod merito nostra constitutio introduxit;' that is the law he added to the Digest, as to the testamentum militare. 'Quocumque enim modo voluntas ejus suprema inveniat, sive scripta, sive sine scriptura, valet testamentum ex voluntate ejus. Illis autem temporibus, per quos citra expeditionum necessitatem in aliis locis vel suis sedibus degant, minime ad vindicandum tale privilegium adjuvantur; sed testari quidem, et si filii familiarum sint, propter militiam conceduntur.' Therefore, it is clear that by this later law, modifying the law as it originally existed, the privilege was confined to persons expeditionibus occupati, and that if a soldier made a will 'citra expeditionum necessitatem, in aliis locis, vel suis sedibus,' he must have complied with the general law as to the solemnities which were necessary to give effect to a will at Rome. In the next section (s. 3) it is said: 'Sed hactenus hoc illis de principalibus constitutionibus conceditur, quatenus militent, et in castris degant;' so long as they were engaged in actual war. 'Post missionem vero veterani, vel extra castra [alii] si faciant adhuc militantes testamentum: communi omnium civium Romanorum jure id facere debent;' therefore, the veterani, (who were not analogous, as suggested in the argument, to general officers in the English army, but persons who had served the time for which they had engaged, and had been discharged as honestam causam.) were excepted from the privilege. The section continues: 'Et quod in castris fecerint testamentum non communi jure, sed quomodo voluerint, post missionem intra annum tantum valebit;' after they had been discharged, if when castris and not in castris, they should make a will, it must be 'communi omnium civium Romanorum jure.' It goes on: 'Quid ergo, si intra annum quis decesserit, conditio autem heredi adscripta, post annum extiterit? an quasi militis testamentum valeat? Et placet valere, quasi militis.' So it only actual military service, or any mariner or seaman (1) being at sea, may dispose of his personal estate as he might have done before the making of this act.

"XII. And be it further enacted, that this act shall not prejudice or affect any of the provisions contained in an act passed in the eleventh year of the reign of his majesty King George the Fourth and the first year of the reign of his late majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act to amend and consolidate the Laws relating to the Pay of the Royal Navy,' respecting the wills of petty the exemption was confined to soldiers in an engagement or actual danger, otherwise, it would include a soldier on duty at Whitehall. The words of the court are these: 'It is agreed, the will cannot be good unless within the privilege. A mariner on shore is not within the statute. Those who are enlisted in the service of the company have the same privilege as those in the service of the crown, and though he acted as cook, that does not take away the privilege of the soldier. He was not only a soldier, but was upon an expedition. The proof is not clear whether the expedition was over or not; one witness swears he died on the passage; he was certainly engaged in the service. Will pronounced for.' So that it appears doubtful on what particular ground the decision turned; whether because he was 'certainly engaged in the service,' or whether, because it was doubtful, 'whether the expedition was over or not,' and in returning to Moco Moco, he became ill, and died in the hospital.

"This is a decision on the question as far as it goes. If it had been decided on the ground of the deceased having been engaged in actual service at the time, it would have been in point; but, unfortunately, the words at the end of the sentence may render it doubtful on what point the decision turned. But I think it clear that the judge, who was Dr. Bettensworth, considered that the question had not received a judicial decision, and it appears that he had directed the allegation to be reformed by setting forth the expedition on which the party deceased had been engaged; so I presume that the allegation had been objected to on that ground. But I think it, on the whole, clear that the principle adopted in that case, with the limitation 'in actual military service,' is that every soldier was not entitled to the exemption contained in the clause of the statute of Charles 2, but that it was confined to such as were on an expedition—in actual military service, that is, in expeditions. The question, then, comes to be considered, what was the situation of General Drummond at the time when he made this will.

"The allegation pleads that the deceased, at the date of the will and of his death, was a major-general on full pay. Then, if this were sufficient to give the exemption, every major-general in the army on full pay, and every full-pay officer, would be in the same situation. Then it is pleaded that the duties of his office extended to the troops of the royal artillery abroad as well as in England; that he was subject to military law, and liable to be sent upon foreign service, when required, (so is every officer and every soldier in the corps;) and that he was as completely in the actual service of her majesty as if serving with a British regiment on foreign service, but so is every officer and soldier; this is a general and universal description, applicable to all on full-pay or half-pay—all are in the actual service of her majesty. I do not consider that the words, 'in actual military service,' apply to a person in General Drummond's situation, not living within the walls of a garrison, as far as it appears, but suis sedibus; and even if he were, I am of opinion he was not 'in actual military service.' On this ground, therefore, I am of opinion that this is not a valid will, not being attested as required by the act. It would, consequently, be of no use to admit the allegation to proof, as all the facts are before the court, which could not come to a different conclusion if it had the evidence before it. I am of opinion, therefore, that I must reject this allegation. Of course, it is with very great pain that the court finds itself under the necessity of so doing; but I think it best to express my opinion of the law at once. Although this decision may place the family of General Drummond in an unpleasant situation, I am not prepared to say that the privilege would be advantageous to the great body of the army, which it would leave open to fraud, imposition, and malpractices; I think, therefore, I do not inflict a great injury upon them by delivering this opinion of the law. I am of opinion that I ought to reject this allegation, and I do reject it."

In 3 Eccles. Notes of Cases, 4, the following observations from the reporter occur: "It may perhaps be convenient to know, that one (at least) of our colonial courts, the Supreme court of Bengal, has taken the same view of this question as the Prerogative court of Canterbury, by adopting its decision in the case of Drummond v. Parish, and applying its construction of Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 11, to the corresponding section of the Indian Wills Act, (No. XXV. of 1838, s. 29.)"

The Supreme court of Madras has held that the exception applies "only to nuncupative wills of non-commissioned officers and soldiers." Gov. Notification, 5th March, 1840.

(1) Seamen—The will of a seaman, who went on shore, and there died by an accident, was, in the Goods of Lay, (2 Curt. 375,) allowed to pass as that of a seaman "at sea," under Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 11.

Probate was likewise allowed of an unattested codicil made at sea by a pursuer of a man-of-war, as that of a seaman, under the exception contained in the 11th section of the Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26. In the Goods of Hayes, Ibid. 339.

(1) Incompetent to be admitted a witness:—Where the will of an aged person of doubtful capacity was prepared by a solicitor, who was appointed an executor and one of the residuary legatees, it was pronounced against, and the parties propounding it condemned in costs; bare execution in such a case not being considered sufficient. Durling v. Loveland, 2 Curt. 225.

(2) Wife:—In Young v. Richards, (Ibid. 374,) it was held, that the wife of an executor who was a party in the cause is not a competent witness to support the will.

An attesting witness to a codicil, having married a legatee therein, such legatee propounding the codicil, was held to be incompetent as a witness in support of it; and having joined his wife in the proxy in the suit, the court directed his answers to be given to an allegation on the other side, as a party in the cause. Mackenzie v. Yeo, Ibid. 509.

(3) Interest:—In Allen v. McPherson, (Ibid. 513,) an objection to the competency of a solicitor as a witness in support of a codicil, he having admitted, that in the first instance he retained the proctor in the cause for the parties who propounded the codicil, but who did not admit, that he was responsible for the costs, was overruled.

A legatee, at the request of the testator, signed her name to the will, the testator subsequently duly executed the will in the presence of two witnesses who attested it; a motion to strike out the name of the legatee was rejected. In the Goods of Logan Mitchell, Ibid. 916.

A married woman, having under her marriage settlement a power to dispose of property "by will to be published by her in the presence of and to be attested by two credible witnesses," published her will in the presence of two witnesses, who attested the same, one of those witnesses being the wife of the executor, who was also a legatee under the will, and had not renounced or released his legacy. Probate was granted, leaving the question as to the due execution of the will open. In the Goods of Biggar, Ibid. 100.

An inofficious will, prepared from instructions given to the drawer by the party solely benefited, and who was in no way related to the testator, was pronounced void on proof of the capacity of the testator, and of the will having been read over to him. Wrench v. Murray, 3 Ibid. 623.

A paper of a testamentary nature was produced by a sole legatee named in it; it was reported to be signed by the testator and to be attested by two witnesses, one of whom was subsequently to the date of the paper, a question, married the legatee: it was held, that his sole testimony could not sustain the paper, there being no circumstances leading up to the probability of the transaction, there being, on the contrary, various facts and circumstances from which the court drew a conclusion unfavourable to its validity. *Mackenzie v. (who was also an executor,) in order to render himself a competent witness to support the will. It was held, first, that the proxy of renunciation took effect from its date; and, secondly, supposing the renunciation to be invalid, that, as the interest under the will was conveyed by the deed of gift, the party was a competent witness under Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 17. *Munday v. (2) Marriage:—In the Goods of Shirley, (Ibid. 657,) probate was allowed to pass of a will made previously to 1st January, 1838, the testator having married in 1839, it not being revoked by Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 18.

(3) Presumption of an intention:—A testatrix duly executed a will, and, subsequently thereto, two other wills, in both of which was contained a clause revoking all former wills. She afterwards destroyed the latter two wills: it was held, that the first will was not thereby revived; and that parol evidence was not admissible to shew an intention to revive. Major v. Williams, 3 Ibid. 432.

A will, (dated 1841,) revoking all former wills, referred to a clause in a former will. Probate was refused, of so much of the former will as was necessary to explain the latter will. In the Goods of Catherine Sinclair, Ibid. 746.

In the Goods of Wilson, (2 Ibid. 853,) a motion to supply a legacy omitted by mistake, was rejected, the will being perfect, and having a clause revoking all former wills.

An allegation setting up parol evidence, in order to shew that two codicils were not intended to operate together, but that the latter revoked the former, was rejected; there being no ambiguity on the face of the papers themselves. Thorne v. Roake, Ibid. 799.

The testator having left two substantive wills, the latter disposing of the whole of his property, although not expressly revoking the former will, nor the appointment of executors therein: it was held to have revoked the former, and to be alone the will of the testator. Henfrey v. Henfrey, Ibid. 468.

In Wood v. Goodlake, (Ibid. 82,) it appeared, that the deceased died on 28th April, 1836, possessed of real and personal estate, together of the value of 1,000,000*l*. Two papers, A. and B., alleged to have been found, at the deceased's death, in his fast-locked repositories, annexed together by wafers, and sealed up in an envelope, endorsed, "The will of James Wood, Esq., 2nd and 3rd December, 1834," were propounded, as together containing the will.—A. which was headed, "Instructions for the will of me, James Wood, Esq. of Gloucester," was dated 2nd of December, 1834, and was signed by the deceased, but not attested, purported to appoint four gentlemen by name executors, to desire them to take possession of his personal estates, subject to the payment of debts and "such legacies as I may hereafter direct," and to declare he would dispose of his real estates by writing indorsed thereon. Paper B. a separate paper, dated 3rd December, 1834, signed by the deceased, and attested by three witnesses, began, "I James Wood, Esq. do declare this to be my will, for disposing my estates, as directed by my instructions," gave all his real and personal estates, "which I may not dispose of," and "subject to my debts, and to any legacies or bequests of any part thereof, which I may hereafter make," &c. "to my executors," not naming, or otherwise describing them. Both papers were very informal, were in the hand-writing of one of the executors, (the deceased's attorney,) and ultimately appeared to have been by such attorney annexed together, sealed up in the envelope, indorsed, and locked up in the deceased's bureau during his last illness, and, without his directions or knowledge, held that the presumption of law, that instructions are superseded by the execution of a will, was not repelled, that the two papers not being published together, as the will of the deceased, nor annexed with his knowledge; and A. not being unequivocally referred to in B., A. formed no part of the deceased's will, that consequently the interest of the four parties named in it as executors, was at an end, and that there was no party before the court with an admitted interest, who could propound B., pray probate of it, or administration with it annexed: the court, therefore, pronounced against A., made no decree as to B., and condemned the parties propounding A. and B. in the costs of one of the next of kin.

Another paper, propounded as a codicil by legatees named in it, opposed by the asserted ted, that no will or codicil, or any part thereof, as aforesaid, or by another will or codicil executed, or by some writing declaring an intention to be in the manner in which a will is hereinbefore the burning (1), tearing (2), or otherwise destroying or by some person in his presence and by his avowing the same.

ted, that no obliteration, interlineation, or other the execution thereof, shall be valid or have any or effect of the will before such alteration shall ration shall be executed in like manner as herein of the will (4); but the will, with such alteration n, dated referred to.

A testamentary paper (dated 1826 signed by a testator, having an attestation clause, but not subscribed by witnesses. The presumption of law against the final character of the paper was held to be rebutted and probate granted upon the evidence and circumstances. Pett v. Hake, Ibid. 612.

(1) Burning:—In the Goods of Thorpe, (2 Ibid. 913,) probate was allowed of a copy of a duly executed codicil, which had been burnt by mistake.

(2) Tearing:—In the Goods of Shaw, (Ibid. 905,) probate was granted of a will by the testator when in a delirious state.

A will being torn into four pieces by the testator, is prima facie revoked, and the executors will not, on motion, upon an affidavit that the deceased tore the paper in a fit of passion and did not intend to revoke it, decree probate of such a paper, in the absence of other next of kin. In the Goods of Colberg, (Ibid. 832.)

(3) Otherwise destroying:—Cancellation of a will is not a revocation thereof, unless the words "otherwise destroying" be used. Stephens v. Taprell, Ibid. 458.

(4) Alteration shall be executed as hereinbefore is required for the execution of the will:—A testator, by his will executed, devised certain real estates to R. in fee, subject to and charged with an annuity of six hundred pounds a year which he gave to his daughter E. J., for her life with powers of distress and entry on the devised estates, in case the annuity were in arrear. He subsequently erased with the word "six," and inserted over it the word "two," leaving, however, the word "six" legible in each place where it occurred, and on the same day he executed a deed, and on the same day he executed a deed or codicil to his will, in the presence of one witness, attesting the above alterations, it being the substitution of "two" for "six." It was, under these circumstances, decreed that the annuity of 600*l.* Locke, (Ibid. 901.)

A testator, after having partly erased and substituted the word "four" for "two," not being attested, a will passed, as it originally was, "four" being sufficient.

as part thereof, shall be deemed to be duly executed if the signature of the testator and the subscription of the witnesses be made in the margin or on some other part of the will opposite or near to such alteration, or at the foot or end of or opposite to a memorandum referring to such alteration, and written at the end or some other part of the will.

"XXII. And be it further enacted, that no will or codicil, or any part thereof, which shall be in any manner revoked (1), shall be revived otherwise than by the re-execution thereof, or by a codicil executed in manner hereinbefore required, and showing an intention to revive the same; and when any will or codicil which shall be partly revoked, and afterwards wholly revoked, shall be revived, such revival shall not extend to so much thereof as shall have been revoked before the revocation of the whole thereof, unless an intention to the contrary shall be shown.

paper. In the Goods of Bevan, 2 Curt. 369.

A testator executed his will, containing a legacy therein of fifty pounds to S. S. Subsequently to the execution, he erased the word "fifty," and substituted the word "thirty." The alteration not being attested, probate was granted with the original word "fifty" inserted. In the Goods of Rippin, 3 Curt. 121, see vide 2 Ibid. 332.

The appointment of the executors in a will, being made in a clause after the signature of the testator, administration with the will annexed granted to the residuary legatee, the clause appointing the executors not being part of the will. In the Goods of Howell, 2 Curt. 342.

A testatrix obliterated, animo revocandi, several passages of her will, so that none of the parts obliterated could be distinguished upon the face of the will: it was held, that this was a complete revocation within the meaning of Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 21. Townley v. Watson, 3 Ibid. 761. 3 Eccles. Notes of Cases, 17. Sir Herbert Jenner Just observing, "I am of opinion that this allegation must be admitted.

"The 21st section of the present Wills Act provides, 'That no obliteration, interlineation, or other alteration made in any will, after the execution thereof, shall be valid or have any effect, except so far, as the words or effect of the will, before such alteration shall not be apparent, unless it be re-executed, as prescribed by the act,' and the construction which the court has, in a former case, put upon that word 'apparent,' is apparent on the face of the instrument itself.

"In the case of Brooke v. Kent, (3 Moore's P. C. Ca. 334, vide post. 1797, n. (2).) evidence dehors the will was admitted; but that was a question of intention, and was so treated by the Judicial Committee. There was no intention entirely to revoke a legacy, the wish was to substitute a sum of 100*l.* for 200*l.* In this case, there is no intention to substitute one legacy for another; the intention is to revoke the legacies in toto. The court being of opinion, that the proper construction of the 21st section is that to which I have just referred, considers this allegation admissible; and that if the facts pleaded be proved, this instrument will be entitled to probate without the obliterated parts."

In the Goods of Ibbetson (Sir Charles),

2 Curt. 337,) the testator, after the execution of his will, obliterated and erased certain parts thereof. Probate was granted of the will, with those parts in blank, the original words not being discernible on the face of the paper.

In the Goods of Brooke, (Ibid. 343, vide post. 1797, n. (2).) the testator, after the 1st January, 1838, erased certain words in a will executed in July, 1837, and wrote a memorandum, stating what the words erased originally were, but such memorandum was unattested. Motion for probate of the will as it originally stood, was rejected.

(1) In any manner revoked.—A testator, intending to destroy his will, threw it on the fire; but a devisee under the will snatched it off, and took it away, a corner of the envelope only being burnt. The testator was displeased at her having taken it, and she, being urged by him to give it back, promised to burn it; and pretended to do so in his presence, but did not. Testator afterwards told another person, that the devisee had thrown the will on the fire, but, on that party expressing a doubt, testator said that he did not care, and that, if he was alive and well, he would make another. He took no further step either to destroy the old will, or to make a new one; a jury having found that the testator had revoked the will by burning: it was held, in a case of copyhold to which the Statute of Frauds, (Stat. 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 6,) does not extend, and before Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, that the will was revoked by the attempt to burn, and was not revived after such revocation. See d. Reed v. Harris, 8 A. & E. 1.

A testator, in the year 1832, made a will and codicil, and, in March, 1836, a second codicil. In October, 1836, he executed a new will, prepared by his solicitor, and which was delivered into his possession. At his death, the will of 1836 could not be found: it was held, that the effect of the execution of the later will was to revoke the prior will and codicils, and that the subsequent destruction of the second will by the testator, (so presumed from it having been delivered into his possession and not being forthcoming,) did not per se operate to revive the first will and codicils. James v. Cohen, 3 Curt. 770. 3 Eccles. Notes of Cases, 30.

(1) Shall not extend to any will made before the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight:—In Hobbs v. Knight, (1 Curt. 768,) a party duly executed a will in 1835, and after the first of January, 1838, cut therefrom his signature: it was held, first, that the effect of such act was to be considered with reference to the provisions of Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26; the 34th section of that statute enacting, that the act "shall not extend to any will made before the 1st of January, 1838," not applying to any act done to a will after that date. Secondly, that the cutting out the signature amounted to a revocation of the will under the terms "tearing or otherwise destroying the same," in the 20th section of the statute.

Where a testator, after the 1st of January, 1838, having obliterated the word three or five, and substituted the word one, in a will made in 1837, the alteration not being attested as required by Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26: probate was granted in blank. In the Goods of Livock, Ibid. 906.

An unattested codicil without date, the deceased dying in January, 1839, was pronounced for, the case being bare of facts, and there being nothing to shew, that the codicil was signed after the first of January, 1838, when Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, came into operation. Pechell v. Jenkinson, 2 Ibid. 273.

"The question is, whether all wills and codicils made before that date are altogether,

"An Act to alter the Mode of giving Notices for the holding of Vestries, and of making Proclamations in Cases of Outlawry, and of giving Notices on Sundays with respect to various Matters."

"Whereas by an act of parliament passed in the fifty-eighth year of the reign of his majesty King George the Third, intituled, 'An Act for the Regulation of Parish Vestries,' it is enacted, that no vestry or meeting of the inhabitants in vestry of or for any parish shall be holden until public notice shall have been given of such vestry, and of the place and hour of holding the same, and the special purpose thereof, three days at the least before the day to be appointed for holding such vestry, by the publication of such notice in the parish church or chapel on some Sunday during or immediately after divine service, and by affixing the same, fairly-written or printed, on the principal door of such church or chapel; and whereas by an act passed in the thirty-first year of Queen Elizabeth it is enacted, that before any outlawry shall be had and pronounced proclamation shall be made at the door of the church or chapel of the town or parish where the defendant shall be dwelling immediately after divine service on a Sunday; and whereas by divers acts relative to the assessing and collecting of highway and poor rates and land tax, and other matters, it is directed or required that public notice shall be given with reference to certain proceedings relating thereto respectively in the parish churches or chapels during divine service; and whereas by ancient custom notice is usually given in churches during divine service of the times appointed for holding courts leet, courts baron, and customary courts; and whereas it is expedient that such mode of giving notices should be altered; be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the passing of this act so much of the said first-recited act as directs the publication of such notices to be made in the parish church or chapel on some Sunday during or immediately after divine service shall be and the same is hereby repealed; and that from and after the first day of January next no proclamation or other public notice for a vestry meeting or any other matter shall be made or given in any church or chapel during or after divine service, or at the door of any church or chapel at the conclusion of divine service.

passed in the last session of parliament, intituled, 'An Act secular Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of Ely in certain Liberties in the Counties of York, Nottingham, and Cambridge,' it was amongst other things enacted, that all the secular authority of the Bishop of Ely in the isle of Ely in the county of Cambridge, and all authority of the chief justice of Ely, theretofore appointed by the Bishop of Ely, should, from and after the passing of the said act, cease and determine, and all the secular authority of the said bishop should become and be vested in his late majesty, his heirs and successors; provided always, that nothing therein contained should prevent any justice of the peace then acting for the said isle from continuing to act as such within the limits of the said jurisdiction as if the said act had not been passed; and it was further enacted, that the county rates for the said isle of Ely should remain, as theretofore, distinct from the rates for the rest of the county of Cambridge, and should be assessed and levied, and paid and applied, by and under the order and direction of the justices of the peace for the said isle, as if the same were a separate county, but in all other respects under the same regulations as were applicable to the rates of other counties in England; and it was further enacted, that no person should, from and after the passing of the said act, be committed to the gaol at Ely, but all persons who, if the said act had not passed, might have been committed to or confined in such gaol, might be committed to and confined in the gaol at Cambridge, and the justices of the said isle of Ely should have full power to commit to the said gaol at Cambridge, and all persons who at the time of the passing of the said act should be confined in the said gaol at Ely should, as soon as might be after the passing of the said act, be delivered up by the keeper of the said gaol at Ely to the keeper of the said gaol at Cambridge, together with the warrant or instrument under or by virtue whereof every such person should be then detained in custody, and the keeper of the said gaol at Cambridge should receive and detain such persons in custody in the same way as if such persons had originally been committed to his custody: and whereas the gaol for the county of Cambridge is not locally situate within the town or borough of Cambridge, but is situate near thereto, and within the parish of Chesterton in the same county, and there is a gaol for the said town or borough which is situate within the precincts of the same: and whereas it is desirable to prevent any doubt as to the meaning of the said recited act in regard to the gaol to which persons should be committed and removed from the said isle of Ely, and to declare that by the gaol at Cambridge mentioned in the said act, the gaol for the county of Cambridge for the time being was meant and intended: and whereas by the committal of prisoners from the said isle of Ely to the said county gaol, and the keeping and maintaining such prisoners there, considerable expense will be occasioned to the said county of Cambridge, and in consequence thereof it may be necessary to enlarge the said gaol for the county of Cambridge; and it is therefore expedient that all expenses already occasioned or which may hereafter be occasioned thereby, as well as from the prosecution, trial, punishment, conveyance, and transport of such prisoners, should be charged on the said rates for the said isle of Ely: be it therefore declared and enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that by the gaol at Cambridge mentioned in the herein before-recited act was meant and intended the gaol for the said county of Cambridge situate at Chesterton in the same county; and that all persons who if the said recited act had not passed might have been committed to or confined in the gaol at Ely may be committed to and confined in the gaol for the time being of the said county of Cambridge, and that all justices who if the said act had not been passed might have committed to the gaol of the said isle of Ely shall have full power to commit to the gaol for the time being of the said county of Cambridge.

"II. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for all judges, justices, and others acting under any commission of gaol delivery, to direct that any person who shall have been committed for any crime from the said isle of Ely, and who shall thereupon be convicted and sentenced to imprisonment, shall be imprisoned either in the gaol or house of correction of the said county of Cambridge, or in any other

"III. And be it enacted, that all expenses already incurred or which may hereafter be incurred under or by virtue of the said recited act by the committal of persons from the said isle of Ely to the gaol for the said county of Cambridge, and of the keeping and maintenance of such persons there, and also of the prosecution, trial, punishment, conveyance, and transport of such prisoners, and all other expenses occasioned by their being kept and detained in such gaol, or by the consequent and necessary increase of turnkeys and other attendants, or the alteration or enlargement of the said gaol, and also a due proportion of the expenses of the necessary repairs of the said gaol, and of the general expenses of the establishment thereof for the time being, shall be paid and satisfied out of the said rates for the said isle of Ely; and (notice in writing of the amount of such expenses being given or transmitted by post by the clerk of the peace for the said county to the clerk of the peace for the said isle half-yearly, specifying the time at which the same are required to be paid,) the justices of the peace for the said isle shall from time to time assess and levy the amount of such expenses, and use and exercise all powers, authorities, and methods in regard thereto, in the same manner as they are and shall be empowered by law to assess and levy county rates, or rates in the nature of a county rate, within the said isle for other purposes; and the amount of such expenses shall from time to time be paid by the treasurers for the said isle, or one of them, to the treasurer for the said county, to be applied to the satisfaction of all such expenses accordingly; and such last-mentioned treasurer shall be accountable for the same in the same manner as for other county rates received by him: provided always, that no enlargement of the said gaol shall be made until notice of such proposed enlargement shall be given by the clerk of the peace for the said county to the clerk of the peace for the said isle, nor until the expediency of such enlargement shall have been submitted to the consideration of and shall have been agreed to by a joint committee of six justices of the peace for the said county and isle, to be appointed at the general or quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for the said county and isle respectively next after such notice in the manner provided.

"IV. And be it enacted, that if at any time hereafter the justices of the peace for the said isle shall refuse to make, assess, and levy a rate for defraying any such expenses as aforesaid, (and the nonpayment thereof by the time to be specified in such notice shall be construed to be a refusal to make, assess, and levy such rate,) the justices of the peace for the said county and isle respectively shall, at the respective general or quarter sessions which shall be holden in and for the county and in and for the isle next after such refusal respectively, appoint six justices of the peace for the county and for the isle in manner hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, the justices of the peace for the said county shall at such sessions appoint three justices of the peace for the said county, and the justices of the peace for the said isle shall at such sessions appoint three justices of the peace for the said isle; which justices of the peace so to be respectively appointed as aforesaid are hereby required to meet, at such time as shall be fixed for the purpose by the chairman of such general or quarter sessions for the said county, at the gaol for the said county, and of which time of meeting notice in writing shall be given or transmitted by post by the clerk of the peace for the said county to the county justices so to be appointed, and by the same clerk of the peace to the clerk of the peace for the said isle, who shall give or transmit the same by post to the isle justices so to be appointed; and the justices of the peace so to be appointed as aforesaid, or the major part of them then and there assembled, (such major part not being less than five in number,) shall hold a special sessions at the said gaol for the purpose of ascertaining and settling whether any and what expenses are chargeable in respect of any of the matters aforesaid on the rates of the said isle, and the proportion of expenses in respect of any of the said matters which ought to be borne by the said county and isle respectively; and the clerk of the peace for the said county shall attend such special sessions, and keep a record of the proceedings there, which record shall be evidence thereof; and the sum or sums which at any such special sessions as aforesaid shall be declared to be chargeable on the said isle under this act, shall be levied and raised in manner aforesaid.

“V. And be it enacted, that all justices of the peace acting in and for the said isle of Ely shall from and after the passing of this act have and possess and may exercise all such and the same rights, privileges, powers, and authorities whatsoever within the said isle of Ely as any justice of the peace acting in and for any county, riding, or division now hath or possesses or may exercise in such county, riding, or division.

“VI. And be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful from and after the passing of this act for any justice of the peace acting in and for the said county of Cambridge, and he is hereby authorized, to issue under his hand and seal any warrant or warrants for the apprehension of any person or persons residing or being within the said isle of Ely, charged on oath before him the said justice with any felony or misdemeanour committed in the said county of Cambridge, and in like manner for any justice of the peace acting in and for the said isle of Ely, and he is hereby authorized, to issue under his hand and seal any warrant or warrants for the apprehension of any person or persons residing or being within the said county of Cambridge, charged on oath before him the said last-mentioned justice with any felony or misdemeanor committed in the said isle of Ely; and the constables or constable or other person to whom any such warrant or warrants shall or may be addressed or directed are and is hereby authorized to apprehend and take any such person or persons so charged on oath as aforesaid (and whose name or names shall be inserted in such warrant or warrants) with any such felony or misdemeanor committed in the said county of Cambridge or in the said isle of Ely, without indorsement of such warrant or warrants by any justice of the peace of the said county of Cambridge or of the said isle of Ely.

“VII. And whereas doubts have arisen whether the isle of Ely is included in enactments made in several statutes respecting counties, ridings, or divisions; be it therefore enacted, that under such statutes heretofore passed or hereafter to be passed, the isle of Ely shall be deemed and taken to be a division of a county.

“VIII. And whereas the townships of Feliakirk and Sutton-under-Whitstonecliffe, in the parish of Feliakirk and townships of Kilburn and Marton Lordship, in the county of York, are locally situated within the north riding of the said county, and yet for certain purposes are esteemed to be within the liberty of Ripon in the said county, heretofore part of the secular jurisdiction of the Archbishop of York: and whereas by the said act of the last session of parliament it was amongst other things enacted, that all the secular jurisdiction of the said Archbishop of York in the said liberty of Ripon should from and after the passing of the said act cease and determine, and should become and be transferred to and vested in his said late majesty, his heirs and successors: and whereas the said townships are distant upwards of fourteen miles from Ripon aforesaid, and it is highly expedient that the said townships should be entirely separate and distinct from the said liberty of Ripon; be it therefore enacted, that from and after the passing of this act, the said townships of Feliakirk and Sutton-under-Whitstonecliffe, and the said townships of Kilburn and Marton Lordship, be absolutely removed and separated out of and from the said liberty of Ripon, and out of and from the jurisdiction thereof, and become parts of the said north riding, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, and be solely within the jurisdiction of the said north riding; any custom or usage to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding.

“IX. And be it enacted, that this act may be repealed or altered by any other act in this present session of parliament.”

An Act to revive and continue until the sixth day of April, One thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight, an Act of the last Session of Parliament, for suspending Proceedings for recovering Payment of the Money advanced under the Act for establishing Tithe Compositions in Ireland."

CLXVII. STAT. 7 GULIELMI 4 & 1 VICTORIAE, c. 69(2). A.D. 1837.

An Act to amend an Act for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales."

"(3) Whereas an act was passed in the seventh year of the reign of his late majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales;' and it is expedient to amend the said act in certain respects; be it enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the tithe commissioners for England and Wales shall have power, if they shall think fit, to confirm under their hands and seal any instrument of voluntary apportionment, and also any agreement for giving land instead of tithes, made according to the provisions of the said act, to which shall be annexed a map or plan agreed to be adopted by a parochial meeting, although they shall not be satisfied of the accuracy of such map or plan, or that the several quantities of land specified in such apportionment or agreement are therein truly stated; but no recital of quantity or admeasurement of land, nor any map or plan annexed to any such confirmed apportionment or agreement, nor any copy thereof, shall be deemed evidence of the quantity of land referred to therein or of the accuracy of such map or plan, unless the said map or plan, as well as the instrument of apportionment or agreement, shall be signed by the commissioners and sealed with their official seal; provided always, that the commissioners, in case they shall confirm such voluntary apportionment or agreement, but shall not think proper to seal such map or plan, shall certify under their hands upon some part of such map or plan that the same is the map or plan referred to in such voluntary apportionment or agreement, as the case may be, which certificate shall be received as evidence of that fact.

"II.(4) And be it enacted, that two thirds in value of the owners of the lands in any parish or district of which the tithes are to be commuted, and respecting the boundaries of which any dispute or doubt shall arise, may, by writing under their hands or the hands of their agents, signed at a parochial meeting called for that purpose according to the provisions of the said act, in the case of a parochial meeting for making a voluntary agreement for the commutation of the tithes of a parish, signify their request to the tithe commissioners that the said commissioners should inquire into and settle such boundaries; and thereupon the said commissioners, or any assistant commissioner specially appointed under their hands and seal for that purpose, shall, by examination of witnesses upon oath, (which oath the said commissioners or assistant commissioner are and is hereby empowered to administer) and also using any other powers contained in the said act, and by such other ways and means as they or he shall think proper, inquire into, ascertain, and set out the boundaries of that parish or district; provided always, that such commissioners or assistant commissioner (before they or he proceed to set out the boundaries of such parish or district) shall give public notice of their or his intention by writing under their or his hands or hand, to be affixed on the most public door of the church of that parish or district, and of every parish and district thereto adjoining, and also by advertisement to be inserted in some newspaper circulated in the county in which such parish or district is situated, and also by writing to be delivered to or left ten days at least before the time of setting out such boundaries at the last or usual place of abode of the respective landowners, or the respective agents of such landowners, through or abutting upon whose lands the boundaries of such parish or district are supposed to pass; and such commissioners or assistant commissioner shall, within one month after ascertaining and setting out the boundaries, publish the same by causing a description thereof in writing to be delivered to or left at the place of abode of one of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the parish or district of which the boundary shall be so set out, and of every parish or district thereunto adjoining, and also of every landowner or his agent through or abutting upon whose lands the boundary so set out shall pass.

"III.(1) And be it enacted, that any person interested in the judgment or determination of the said commissioners or assistant commissioner respecting the said boundaries, who shall be dissatisfied with such determination, may within six calendar months next after the publication of the said boundaries, by delivering or leaving such description as aforesaid, move the court of Queen's Bench to remove the said judgment by certiorari into the said court, the party making such application giving eight days' notice of such application, and of the matter and ground thereof, in writing, to the said commissioners; and the decision of the said commissioners or assistant commissioner, or, in case of removal as aforesaid, the decision of the said court therein, shall be final and conclusive, as to the boundaries of such parish or district, for all purposes whatsoever; and after the expiration of the said term of six calendar months the judgment shall not be removed or removable by certiorari or any other writ or process whatsoever into any of her majesty's courts of record at Westminster or elsewhere; and no certiorari shall be allowed to remove any such judgment unless the party prosecuting the certiorari shall before allowance thereof enter into a recognizance before one of the justices of the said court in the sum of fifty pounds, with condition to prosecute the same without wilful delay, and to pay to the said commissioners their full costs and charges within one calendar month after the judgment shall be confirmed, to be taxed according to the custom of the court.

"IV. And be it enacted, that it shall not be necessary to state in any instrument of apportionment the several quantities of wheat, barley, and oats charged upon the estate of any landowner or upon any portion of such estate included in such apportionment; provided that the whole sum agreed or awarded to be paid by way of rent-charge instead of the tithes of the whole parish or district be therein stated, and the whole number of bushels of wheat, barley, and oats ascertained to be the fixed quantity of corn of which the variable value is to be paid in money by way of rent-charge, and also the several sums of money which were at the time of the confirmation of the apportionment of equal value with the quantities of wheat, barley, and oats apportioned on each estate or each separate portion thereof, according to the provisions of the said act, be also stated therein.

"V. And be it enacted, that it shall not be necessary to state in any instrument of voluntary apportionment made in consequence of a parochial agreement, whether the several lands are then cultivated as arable, meadow, or pasture land, or as wood land, common land, or howsoever otherwise, nor to state the amount charged on the several closes of every individual landowner, if three fourths of the landowners interested in the said apportionment shall by some writing under their hands request the commissioners to direct that such statements be omitted.

"VI. And be it enacted, that it shall not be necessary for the commissioners to send a copy of any draught or voluntary apportionment made in consequence of a parochial agreement for the inspection of any parties, nor to hold any meeting to hear any objection thereto, when one landowner shall be seised, either in fee-simple or fee-tail, of the whole of the lands that are not glebe lands in such parish.

"VII.(2) And be it enacted, that the prices at which the conversion from money into corn is to be made, at the time of the confirmation of each apportionment, according to the provisions of the said act, are seven shillings and one farthing for a bushel of wheat, three shillings and eleven pence halfpenny for a bushel of barley, and two shillings and nine pence for a bushel of oats.

under the great seal of Great Britain, as in the said act now in recital is mentioned; which said collector or receiver should be and was thereby charged and chargeable to levy, collect, and receive all such sums of money wherewith all and every such dignities, offices, benefices, and promotions spiritual were charged and chargeable for and towards the payment of the said perpetual yearly tenths; and should pay and content the said sums of money yearly into the receipt of his majesty's exchequer at Westminster, in such manner and form as was thereinafter mentioned: and whereas under or by virtue of the several acts and letters patent hereinbefore mentioned or referred to, and other acts of parliament and letters patent of the crown, the said revenue of first-fruits is now collected and received in a certain office called the Office of First-fruits, which office is a branch of the said court of Exchequer, and consists of four officers; videlicet, a remembrancer of first-fruits and tenths, who holds his office in fee under or by virtue of the said letters patent of King Charles the Second, a collector or receiver, and two sworn clerks; and the revenue of yearly tenths is in the first instance collected and received by a collector or receiver, who holds his office under or by virtue of the said act of the third year of King George the First, or letters patent granted in pursuance thereof, and has two clerks for his assistance in the business of such collection and receipt; and the said revenues of first-fruits and yearly tenths are from time to time paid by the respective collectors or receivers thereof into the bank of England, to the account of her majesty's exchequer; and the same monies, or the amount thereof, are or is afterwards from time to time paid to the treasurer for the time being of the said governors of the bounty of Queen Anne for the augmentation of the maintenance of the poor clergy: and whereas the names of the present officers employed in the said offices of first-fruits and tenths for the collection, receipt, and payment, in manner aforesaid, of the said revenue of first-fruits and yearly perpetual tenths, and the average yearly amount of the emoluments of all such officers respectively, arising from salaries and fees, or otherwise, (as stated by such officers respectively,) and the annual expenses of the said offices for rent, salary to an office keeper, stationery, coals, candles, and other incidental matters, are set forth in the schedule to this act, and amount in the whole to the yearly sum of two thousand and twenty-two pounds eighteen shillings and eleven pence: and whereas the method at present in use for the collection and receipt of the said first-fruits and tenths by the said several officers respectively, and the payment of the same into the bank of England to the account of her majesty's exchequer, and the subsequent payment thereof to the treasurer of the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne as hereinbefore mentioned, is unnecessarily circuitous, complicated, and expensive; and it is therefore expedient that the said office of remembrancer of first-fruits and tenths, and the said several offices of collectors or receivers of first-fruits and tenths, and the clerkships attached to the same offices respectively, should be abolished, and that the collection and receipt as well as the expenditure and application of the whole revenue of first-fruits and tenths should be placed under the management of the said governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, and their treasurer for the time being under their immediate control, by which means the collection and receipt of the said first-fruits and tenths, and the proceedings to recover and enforce the payment thereof, may be rendered more simple and less oppressive to the clergy paying the same, and the expenses attending such collection and receipt may be greatly lessened, and the clear revenues of first-fruits and tenths be consequently increased for the augmentation of the maintenance of the poor clergy as directed by the said letters patent of her said majesty Queen Anne: be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the twenty-fourth day of December next after the passing of this act the said office of remembrancer of first-fruits and tenths, the said offices of collectors or receivers of first-fruits and tenths respectively, and the several clerkships and other offices attached or belonging thereto respectively, shall be and the same are hereby abolished.

(1) Bishoprick of Sodor and Man:—"The Isle of Man was converted to the Christian faith by St. Patrick, about the year 440, at which time the bishoprick of Man was erected; St. German, to whose name and memory the cathedral is dedicated, being the first Bishop of Man, who, with his successors, had this island only for their diocese, till the Norwegians had conquered the Western Isles, and soon after Man, which was about the beginning of the eleventh century.

"It was about this time that the Insule Sodorenses, being thirty-two, (so called from the bishoprick of Sodor erected in one of them, namely the Isle of Hy,) were united to Man, and from that time the bishops of the united sees were styled Sodor and Man, and sometimes Man and Insularum; and they had the Archbishop of Drontheim, (styled Nidorensis,) for their metropolitan. And this continued till the island was finally annexed to the crown of England, when Man had its own bishops again, who styled themselves variously, sometimes Bishop of Man only, sometimes Sodor and Man, and sometimes Sodor de Man; giving the name of Sodor to a little isle lying within a musket shot of the mainland, called by the Norwegians, Holm, and by the inhabitants, Peel, in which stands the cathedral. For in these express words, in an instrument yet extant, Thomas, Earl of Derby and Lord of Man, A.D. 1505, confirms to Huam Heskett, Bishop of Sodor, all the lands, &c., anciently belonging to the Bishops of Man; namely, 'Ecclesiam cathedralen Sancti Germani in Holm, Sodor vel Pele vocatum, ecclesiamque Sancti Patricii ibidem, et locum prefatum in quo prefatam ecclesiam, sita sunt.' "This bishoprick had for its diocese this isle and the Hebrides, or Western Islands of Scotland; but which were called Sodoroc by the Danes, who went to them by the north from the Swediah, Sodor, sail, or oar, islands, from which the title of the Bishop of Sodor is supposed to have originated. The bishop's seat was at Rushen, or Castletown, in the Isle of Man, and in Latin is entitled Sodoranus: but when this island became dependent on the kingdom of England, the Western Islands withdrew themselves from the obedience of their bishop, and had a bishop of their own, whom they entitled also Sodoranus, but commonly, Bishop of the Isles. Beaton.

"The name of Sodor, whether derived from Sodoroc, or a corruption of the Saxon root of 'South,' evidently belongs to the Western Isles. There probably never was a place in the island of Hy, called Sodor, and certainly Peel is never so denominated. The mistake has probably arisen from those who not knowing the meaning of the term Sodor, attached it to the site of the cathedral. The present official name of the bishopric is, 'The Bishoprick and See of the Isle of Man and Sodor, and of Sodor of Man:' words which, without deciding any thing, comprehend both meanings. The expressions used in the deed of Thomas, Earl of Derby, in 1505, only prove that the question was, at that time, in the same state that it is at present.

"Information with regard to the present state of this see is valuable, not only on account of the interest which is generally attached to it, from the respect shown to the memory of Bishop Wilson, but because, in consequence of its seclusion, it remains at this moment in a condition much nearer that of the primitive church, than the rest of the Christian body with which it is ecclesiastically connected.

"It should be remembered that the Isle of Man is an independent kingdom under the same sovereign as England, but governed by its own laws. This assertion may excite a smile in those who are unacquainted with the real state of the case; but it is strictly true, for an act of the British parliament is of no force in the island, unless it be specially extended to it, and even then it may be a question whether, if enforced against the wishes of the legislative body of the island, it would not rather be an invasion of rights, which the Manx have no power to resist. But this circumstance has placed the ecclesiastical affairs of the see in a very different state from what they are in England. Laws which have been there passed to increase the power of bishops, or to restrain the jurisdiction of their courts, are not here recognised. And the civil power has always given efficiency to the decisions of the ecclesiastical courts, by enforcing them by temporal authority. Add to which, that the circumstances of the island, which differ much from those of England, do, perhaps, create as great a practical difference as the actual state of the laws. The diocese is so small, that the bishop can really look after it; he has time for settling delinquencies of pariah clerks and village schoolmasters, and is often engaged in such matters; his position is such, as not only to give weight to his decisions, but to place him above the suspicion of those local prejudices, which render it so difficult to arrange disputed questions in such societies. His courts are very cheap, and may be very efficient, and if well managed, are a great blessing to a poor population, among whom small properties are still much divided. When or how could a better judgment be obtained, concerning a will under which the property contested amounted to twenty-five shillings? Again, the only provision made for the support of the pauper, is carried on through the ecclesiastical courts. The churchwarden collects the alms of the church for the maintenance of the necessitous, and if any parties possessing property, neglect to assist their poor relations, he presents them as creating a scandal, and the court forces them to provide what is fair. Upon the same principle, questions relating to the maintenance of illegitimate children, are brought before the same tribunal, and practically, the ecclesiastical courts decide not only such matters as belong to a bishop's court in England, as those pertaining to discipline, wills, and marriages, but embrace the maintenance of pauper relatives, the provision for illegitimate children, as well as the debts due to and from the estates of testators during the first year. For the purpose of carrying out the details of such a jurisdiction, three species of courts are held.

"Vicars-general's courts, which are held in two places in the island every fortnight, by a single vicar-general.

"Chapter courts, which are held in four places twice in the year, and in which the bishop, if present, presides with the two vicars-general.

"Consistory courts, which are held once a month, before the bishop and two vicars-general.

"More important questions are removed from the former two courts to the latter, and an appeal lies from all, either to the staff of government in temporal matters, or the Archbishop of York in ecclesiastical.

"But all this is practically and constantly carried on, and a great deal of business is settled in these courts.

"The penal discipline exercised by Bishop Wilson was very great, and as the laws relating to such matters have not been altered, the change which has taken place, must have depended on the negligence or the prudential forbearance of his successors.

"The moral influence arising from such an ecclesiastical power, supported by the temporal authority, would be very considerable, if properly exercised; and the mere fact that the whole of its penal force depends on the temporal authority, will prevent a bishop from stretching its operations unduly. The state of property and of society is very different in the Isle of Man from what it is in England, and if the laws are not the same, it is more than probable that existing institutions are well suited to the condition of those who are living under them. It may be observed, that the bishop of this diocese still exercises the power of granting special licences, which formerly belonged to all bishops.

commissioners, to convey and assure, under the common seal of such body corporate, such advowson, or such right of nomination or presentation, to the purchaser or purchasers thereof: and whereas in some instances the manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments whereof some municipal corporations are seised were granted to them with an obligation to nominate, provide, and sustain in certain churches or chapels able and fit priests, curates, preachers, or ministers, for the performance and administration of ecclesiastical duties and rites therein, and for the cure of the souls of the parishioners and inhabitants of the parishes or places thereunto belonging; and although such corporations have from time to time duly nominated and provided such priests, curates, preachers, or ministers, and paid stipends for their sustenance, and have either provided houses for their residence or made allowances in lieu thereof, yet such stipends and allowances have not been fixed or assured by any competent authority; and for want of any regular endowment or augmentation of such curacies they have not become perpetual cures, or benefices presentative, and the curates have not become bodies politic and corporate, within the meaning of an act passed in the first year of the reign of his majesty King George the First, intituled, 'An Act for making more effectual Her late Majesty's gracious Intentions for augmenting the Maintenance of poor Clergy,' and of an act passed in the thirty-sixth year of the reign of his majesty King George the Third, intituled, 'An Act for the further Support and Maintenance of Curates within the Church of England, and for making certain Regulations respecting the Appointment of such Curates, and the Admission of Persons to Cures augmented by Queen Anne's Bounty, with respect to the Avoidance of other Benefices;' by reason whereof doubts have arisen whether the right of nominating ministers to such churches and chapels can be sold under the provisions of the said first hereinbefore recited act; and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed: be it therefore declared and enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that every right of nomination of every such priest, curate, preacher, or minister, which at the time of the passing of the first hereinbefore recited act was vested in any municipal corporation, or in any member of such corporation in virtue of his office as such, shall and may be sold, at such time and in such manner as the said commissioners may direct, and shall by such conveyance or assurance as is in the said first-recited act mentioned become vested in the purchaser thereof, his heirs and assigns; and that from and after such sale and assurance every such curacy, preachship, or ministry shall become a benefice presentative within the meaning of the said recited act of the thirty-sixth year of the reign of King George the Third; and every such curate, preacher, or minister, and his successors for ever, shall become and be a body politic and corporate within the meaning of the said recited act of the first year of the reign of King George the First, and shall have perpetual succession, and shall be capable of taking and holding in perpetuity all such lands, tithes, tenements, hereditaments, monies, goods, and chattels as shall be granted unto or purchased for them respectively by the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, or by other persons contributing with the said governors as benefactors; and every such purchaser, his heirs and assigns, may present to such benefice, from time to time when and as the same shall become vacant, in the same manner to all intents and purposes as patrons may now present to benefices presentative.

shall accept and take to hold therewith any other benefice having, at the time of his admission, institution, or being licensed thereto, a population of more than five hundred persons; nor shall any spiritual person holding a benefice with a population of more than five hundred persons accept and take to hold therewith any other benefice having, at the time of his admission, institution, or being licensed thereto, a population of more than three thousand persons; nor shall any spiritual person hold together any two benefices if, at the time of his admission, institution, or being licensed to the second benefice, the value of the two benefices jointly shall exceed the yearly value of one thousand pounds.

“V. And be it enacted, that in case the bishop or bishops, as the case may be, to whom any two benefices within the distance of ten miles from each other shall respectively be subject, which, under the provision hereinbefore contained, might not be holden together, but one of which benefices shall be below the yearly value of one hundred and fifty pounds, and the population of which shall exceed two thousand persons, shall think it expedient that the incumbent of one of such benefices should be permitted to hold the said two benefices together, the said bishop or bishops shall be at liberty, upon application made to him or them for that purpose by such incumbent, to state in writing under his or their hand or hands the reason why such benefices should be holden together, and in such case it shall be lawful for the said incumbent to hold the said two benefices together; provided always, that in the last-mentioned case the bishop of the diocese within which such benefice having a population exceeding two thousand persons is situate may from time to time, if he shall so think fit, by an order under his hand and revocable at any time, require that such incumbent should keep residence on and personally serve such benefice during the space of nine months in each year; and if such incumbent shall not, in obedience to the terms of such order and until the same be revoked, reside on and personally serve such benefice, he shall be liable to all the penalties for non-residence imposed by this act, notwithstanding he may have a legal exemption permanent or temporary from residence, or may be resident on some other benefice of which he may be possessed, or may be performing the duties of an office, and the performance of the duties of which might in such cases be accounted as residence on some benefice; provided always, that such spiritual person may, within one month after service upon him of any such order, appeal to the archbishop of the province, who shall confirm or rescind such order, as to him may seem just and proper.

“VI. Provided always, and be it enacted, that before any spiritual person shall be allowed to hold any two benefices together under any provision of this act it shall be necessary for such person to obtain from the Archbishop of Canterbury for the time being a licence or dispensation for the holding thereof, which licence or dispensation the said archbishop is hereby empowered to grant under the seal of his office of faculties, upon being satisfied as well of the fitness of the person as of the expediency of allowing such two benefices to be holden together, and that such licence or dispensation shall issue in such manner and form as the said archbishop shall think fit; and for such licence or dispensation there shall be paid to the registrar of the said office the sum of thirty shillings and no more, and to the seal keeper thereof the sum of two shillings and no more; and that no stamp duty, nor any other fee, save as hereinbefore mentioned, shall be payable on the licence or dispensation to be granted as aforesaid, nor shall any confirmation thereof be necessary; nor shall it be required of any spiritual person applying for any such licence or dispensation to give any caution or security by bond or otherwise before such licence or dispensation is granted; and if the said Archbishop of Canterbury shall refuse or deny to grant any such licence or dispensation as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for her majesty, if she, by the advice of her privy council, shall think fit, upon application by the person to whom such licence or dispensation shall have been refused or denied, to enjoin the said archbishop to grant such licence or dispensation, or to show to her majesty in council sufficient cause to the contrary, and thereupon to make such order touching the refusal or grant of such licence or dispensation as to her majesty in council shall seem fit; and such order shall be binding upon the archbishop.

"VII. And be it further enacted, that where any spiritual person shall be desirous of obtaining a licence or dispensation for holding together any two benefices such spiritual person shall, previously to applying for the grant of such licence or dispensation, deliver to the bishop of the diocese where both benefices are situate in the same diocese, or to the bishops of the two dioceses where such benefices are situate in different dioceses, a statement in writing under his hand, verified as such bishop or bishops respectively may require, according to the form or forms to be promulgated from time to time by the Archbishop of Canterbury and approved by the queen in council, in which statement such spiritual person shall set forth, according to the best of his belief, the yearly income arising from each of the said benefices, separately, on an average of the three years ending on the twenty-ninth day of September next before the date of such statement, and the sources from which such income is derived, and also the yearly amount, on an average of the same period of three years, of all taxes, rates, tenths, dues, and other permanent charges and outgoings to which the same benefices are respectively subject, and also the amount of the population of each of the said benefices, to be computed according to the last returns made under the authority of parliament, and also the distance between the two benefices, to be computed according to the directions of this act; and it shall be lawful for the bishop to whom such statement shall be delivered to make any inquiry which he may think right as to the correctness of the same in respect to the benefices or benefice within his diocese; and such bishop is hereby required, within the space of one month after he shall have received such statement as aforesaid, to transmit to the Archbishop of Canterbury a certificate under his hand, in which certificate such bishop shall set forth or shall annex thereto a copy of the statement delivered to him as aforesaid, and shall thereby certify the amount at which he considers that the annual value and the population of each of the two benefices (where both benefices are situate in the same diocese) and the distance of the said two benefices from each other, or the amount at which he considers the annual value and the population of the benefice within the diocese of such bishop (where the two benefices are situate in different dioceses) and the distance of such benefice from the other benefice, ought to be taken, with respect to the licence or dispensation in question; and whenever both or either of the benefices shall be in the diocese or jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, a certificate shall be made out in manner aforesaid by the archbishop, and shall be retained by him.

"VIII. And be it further enacted, that in estimating the annual value of any benefice for the purpose of any such certificate as aforesaid it shall be lawful for the archbishop or bishop by whom such certificate shall be made, and every such archbishop and bishop is hereby directed, to deduct from the gross amount of the yearly income arising from such benefice all taxes, rates, tenths, dues, and other permanent charges and outgoings to which such benefice shall be subject, but not to deduct or allow for any stipend or stipends to any stipendiary curate or curates, nor for such taxes or rates in respect of the house of residence on any benefice or of the glebe land belonging thereto as are usually paid by tenants or occupiers, nor for monies expended in the repair or improvement of the house of residence and buildings and fences belonging thereto.

"IX. And be it further enacted, that the certificate or certificates to be transmitted to or retained by the Archbishop of Canterbury as aforesaid shall be deposited in the mid office of Faculties, and in the event of the required licence or dispensation being granted shall for the purposes of this act be conclusive evidence of the annual value and population of each of the benefices to which the same shall relate, and of their distance from each other: and the registrar of the faculties shall and he is hereby required to produce such certificate or certificates to any person who may require to inspect the same.

"X. And be it further enacted, that for all the other purposes of this act the annual value of all benefices shall be the net annual value thereof, to be estimated in the same manner as is hereinbefore directed for the purpose of any such certificate as aforesaid; and that it shall be lawful for the court before whom any “XI. And be it enacted, that if any spiritual person, holding any cathedral preferment or benefice, shall accept any other cathedral preferment or benefice, and be admitted, instituted, or licensed to the same contrary to the provisions of this act, every cathedral preferment or benefice so previously held by him shall be and become ipso facto void, as if he had died or had resigned the same, any law, statute, canon, usage, custom, or dispensation to the contrary notwithstanding; and if any spiritual person holding any two or more benefices shall accept any cathedral preferment, or any other benefice, or if any spiritual person holding two or more cathedral preferments shall accept any benefice, or if any spiritual person holding any cathedral preferment or preferments, and benefice or benefices, shall accept another benefice, he shall, before he is instituted, licensed, or in any way admitted to the said cathedral preferment or benefice, in writing under his hand declare to the bishop or bishops within whose diocese or dioceses any of the cathedral preferments or benefices previously holden by him are situate, which cathedral preferment and benefice, or which two benefices, (such two benefices being tenable together under the provisions of this act,) he proposes to hold together, and a duplicate of such declaration shall by such spiritual person be transmitted to the registry of the diocese, and be there filed; and immediately upon any such spiritual person being instituted, licensed, or in any way admitted to the cathedral preferment or benefice which he shall have accepted as aforesaid, such cathedral preferment or preferments, benefice or benefices as he previously held, and as he shall not as aforesaid have declared his intention to hold, or such benefice as shall not be tenable under the provisions of this act with such newly-accepted benefice shall be and become ipso facto void, as if he had died or had resigned the same; and if such spiritual person shall in any such case refuse or wilfully omit to make such declaration as aforesaid, every cathedral preferment and benefice which he previously held shall be and become ipso facto void as aforesaid; provided always that nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect the provision heretofore made with respect to archdeacons, or with respect to spiritual persons holding, with any cathedral preferment, and with or without a benefice, offices in the same cathedral or collegiate church.

“XII. And be it enacted, that nothing hereinbefore contained shall be construed to prejudice or affect the right of possession in any cathedral preferment or benefice to which any spiritual person shall have been collated, admitted, instituted, or licensed, or which shall have been otherwise granted to any spiritual person before the passing of this act, unless he shall after the passing of this act accept or take some cathedral preferment or benefice contrary to the provisions of this act.

“XIII. And be it enacted, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prevent any spiritual person possessed of one or more than one benefice at the time of the passing of this act, and to whom or in trust for whom the advowson of or the next presentation or nomination to any other benefice has been conveyed, granted, or devised by any deed or will made before the twenty-third day of December one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, from taking the said last-mentioned benefice, and holding together such benefice and any one such first-mentioned benefice, (although the benefices to be held together be not within the limits nor under the joint yearly value, nor the population thereof under the amount, prescribed by this act,) but so nevertheless that the said two benefices be such as might have been held together before the passing of this act by dispensation duly granted and confirmed; and the bishop of the diocese in which such second or other benefice is situate shall and may, after a licence or dispensation shall have been obtained by such spiritual person as is by this act required for holding two benefices together, admit, institute, or license such spiritual person thereto, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding; unless such spiritual person, after the passing of this act, and before he shall be so admitted, instituted, or licensed to such second or other benefice as aforesaid, shall have accepted and taken any cathedral preferment or any other benefice, the holding of which with such second or other benefice would be contrary to the provisions of this act.

“XIV. Provided also, and be it enacted, that nothing hereinbefore contained shall be construed to prevent the Reverend Frederick Vernon Lockwood, the Reverend Edward Repton, or the Reverend Temple Fane, formerly chaplains to the house of commons, from taking and holding with any benefice of which any of them was in possession at the time of the passing of this act any cathedral preferment, or any benefice which may be conferred on them or either of them by her majesty in consideration of their respective services as such chaplains, although any such benefices be not within the limits nor under the joint yearly value, nor the population thereof under the amount, prescribed by this act.

“XV. And whereas it is expedient to alter and amend the provisions made by an act passed in the thirty-seventh year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, intituled, ‘An Act for the Union of Churches not exceeding the Value of Six Pounds;’ and by another act passed in the seventeenth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, intituled, ‘An Act for uniting Churches in Cities and Towns Corporate;’ be it enacted, that the said last-recited acts shall be and the same are hereby repealed.

“XXIII. And be it enacted, that whenever two or more benefices which have at any time been united into one benefice shall be disunited and become separate benefices under the provisions of this act, whether the order for disunion shall extend to the whole number of benefices of which such united benefice consisted, or to one or more of such benefices only, it shall be lawful for her majesty in council, on the recommendation of the archbishop of the province, with the consent of the patron or patrons of such benefices respectively, (such consent to be signified in writing under the hands of such patron or patrons,) to assign and attach such portion of the glebe lands, tithes, moduses, rent-charges, or other endowments or emoluments belonging to or arising or accruing within the limits of such united benefice to each of such benefices respectively, as to her majesty in council shall seem fit, notwithstanding such proportion of glebe land, tithes, rent-charges, estate in fee-simple or fee-tail of any tithes, or rent-charge in lieu of tithes, by any deed or declaration under his hand and seal, to be made in such form as the tithe commissioners for England and Wales should approve, and to be confirmed under their seal, to release, assign, or otherwise dispose of the same, so that the same might be absolutely merged and extinguished in the freehold and inheritance of the lands on which the same should have been charged; and whereas it is expedient that the aforesaid provision should be extended in manner hereinafter mentioned: be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the passing of this act it shall be lawful for any person or persons who shall, either alone or together, be seised of or have the power of acquiring or disposing of the fee-simple in possession of any tithes, or rent-charge in lieu of tithes, by any deed or declaration under his or their hand and seal or hands and seals, to be made in such form as the tithe commissioners for England and Wales shall approve, and to be confirmed under their seal, to convey, appoint, or otherwise dispose of the same, so that the same may be absolutely merged and extinguished in the freehold and inheritance of the lands out of or on which the same shall have been issuing or charged; and every such deed or declaration as aforesaid shall be valid and effectual for the purpose aforesaid, although the same may not be executed or made in the manner or with the formalities or requisites which if this act had not been passed would have been essential to the validity of any instrument by which such person or persons could have acquired or disposed of the fee-simple in possession of such tithes, or rent-charge in lieu of tithes.

"II. And be it enacted, that no deed or declaration authorized by this act for the merging of tithes shall be chargeable with any stamp duty.

"III. And be it enacted, that in all cases where tithes, or rent-charge in lieu of tithes, and the lands out of which the same are payable, are both settled to the same uses, it shall be lawful for any person in possession of an estate for life in both such lands and tithes, or rent-charge in lieu of tithes, by any deed or declaration under his hand and seal, to be made in such form as the said commissioners shall approve, and to be confirmed under their seal, to release, assign, or otherwise dispose of such tithes or rent-charge, so that the same may be absolutely merged and extinguished in the freehold and inheritance of the lands out of which such tithes shall have been issuing or on which such rent-charge shall have been charged.

"IV. (1) And whereas doubts have been entertained whether, according to the true construction of the said act, any tithes, or rent-charge in lieu of tithe, can be merged in lands of copyhold tenure, and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed; be it therefore declared and enacted, that the provisions in the said act and this act contained as to the merger of any tithe, or rent-charge in lieu of tithe, shall be deemed and taken to extend to all lands, being copyhold of inheritance or copyhold for lives, or of any other tenure whatsoever.

"V. And be it enacted, that in the construction and for the purposes of this act the several words 'person,' 'lands,' and 'tithes,' shall respectively mean and include whomsoever and whatsoever the same words would have meant and included if the enactment hereinbefore made had been contained in the said recited act instead of this act.

"VI. And be it enacted, that this act shall extend only to England and Wales.

"VII. And be it further enacted, that this act may be amended, altered, or repealed by any act or acts to be passed in this present session of parliament."

parish for ecclesiastical purposes; and the said archbishop or bishop shall draw up a scheme in writing, (the scheme of such bishop to be transmitted to the said archbishop for his consideration,) describing the mode in which it appears to him that the alteration may best be effected, and how the changes consequent on such alteration in respect to ecclesiastical jurisdiction, glebe lands, tithes, rent-charges, and other ecclesiastical dues, rates, and payments, and in respect to patronage and rights to pews, may be made with justice to all parties interested; and if the patron or patrons of the benefice or benefices to be affected by such alteration shall consent in writing under his or their hands to such scheme, or to such modification thereof as the said archbishop may approve, and the said archbishop shall, on full consideration and inquiry, be satisfied with any such scheme or modification thereof, and shall certify the same and such consent as aforesaid, by his report to her majesty in council, it shall be lawful for her majesty in council to make an order for carrying such scheme, or modification thereof, as the case may be, into effect; and such order, being registered in the registry of the diocese, which the registrar is hereby required to do, shall be forthwith binding on all persons whatsoever, including the incumbent or incumbents of the benefice or benefices to be affected thereby, if he or they shall have consented thereto in writing under his or their hands; but if such incumbent or incumbents shall not have so consented thereto the order shall not come into operation until the next avoidance of the benefice by the incumbent objecting to the alteration, or by the surviving incumbent objecting, if more than one shall object thereto; and in such case the order shall forthwith, after such avoidance, become binding on all persons whatsoever.

Power of adjusting disputes arising out of the foregoing alterations.

"XXVII. And whereas the changes effected by virtue of the provisions aforesaid for uniting or disuniting benefices, and for altering the contents of parishes, may, when the orders for those purposes respectively come into operation, raise doubts and create disputes not foreseen at the time when such orders may have been made respecting ecclesiastical jurisdiction, glebe lands, tithes, rent-charges, and other ecclesiastical dues, rates, and payments, patronage, right to pews, and the definition of local boundaries; be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for her majesty in council, at any time within five years after such orders respectively shall come into full operation, if occasion shall arise, to make a supplemental order for removing such doubts and settling such disputes; and every such supplemental order shall have the same force and effect as if it had formed part of the original order made under the provisions of this act: provided always, that in every case in which the contents of parishes shall be so altered, such alteration shall not in any way affect the secular rates, taxes, charges, duties, or privileges, of such parishes, or of any part of them.

Spiritual persons not to take to farm for occupation above eighty acres, without consent of the bishop, and then not beyond seven years, under penalty of 40s. per acre.

And be it enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any spiritual person holding any such cathedral preferment, benefice, curacy, or lectureship, or who shall be licensed or allowed to perform such duties as aforesaid, by himself or by any other for him or to his use, to engage in or carry on any trade or dealing for

(1) Any trade or dealing for gain or profit.—To an action of assumpsit by the indorsees against the indorser of a bill of exchange, the defendant pleaded that the bill was made and indorsed after the passing of Stat. 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, which restrained spiritual persons from being occupied in any trade or dealing; that the plaintiffs were a banking company, of which certain spiritual persons holding benefices, were partners and members; that the trade or business of a banker was carried on by the said copartnership for gains and profits, as well of such spiritual persons as others, contrary to the form of the statute, whereby the indorsement and the promise in the declaration mentioned, were void in law: it was held on demurrer, that the plea was good, and that the trade of a banker was within the meaning of the statute. Hall v. Franklin, 3 M. & W. 259. Vide Stephens on Nisi Prius, tit. PARTNERS, 2378.

subsequent to such sentence or suspension, such spiritual person shall for such second offence be suspended for such time as to the judge shall seem fit; and for his third offence be deprived ab officio et beneficio, and thereupon it shall be lawful for the patron or patrons of any such cathedral preferment, benefice, lectureship, or office, to make donation or to present or nominate to the same as if the person so deprived were actually dead; and in all such cases of suspension the bishop during such suspension shall sequester the profits of any cathedral preferment, benefice, lectureship, or office of which such spiritual person may be in possession, and by an order under his hand direct the application of the profits of the same respectively, after deducting the necessary expenses of providing for the due performance of the duties of the same respectively, towards the same purposes and in the same order, as near as the difference of circumstances will admit, as are hereinafter directed with respect to the profits of a benefice sequestered in case of non-compliance after monition with an order requiring a spiritual person to proceed and reside on his benefice, save that no part of such profits shall be paid to the spiritual person so suspended, nor applied in satisfaction of a sequestration at the suit of a creditor; and in case of deprivation the bishop shall forthwith give notice thereof in writing under his hand to the patron or patrons of any cathedral preferment, benefice, lectureship, or office, which the said spiritual person may have held in the manner hereinafter required with respect to notice to the patron of a benefice continuing under sequestration for one whole year, and thereby becoming void, and any such cathedral preferment or benefice shall lapse at such period after the said notice as any such last-mentioned benefice would under the provisions of this act lapse: provided always, that no contract shall be deemed to be void by reason only of the same having been entered into by a spiritual person trading or dealing, either solely or jointly with any other person or persons, contrary to the provisions of this act, but every such contract may be enforced by or against such spiritual person, either solely or jointly with any other person or persons, as the case may be, in the same way as if no spiritual person had been party to such contract.

Penalties for non-residence, on incumbent not having a licence or exemption, unless he be resident on another benefice.

"XXXII. And be it enacted, that every spiritual person holding any benefice shall keep residence on his benefice, and in the house of residence (if any) belonging thereto; and if any such person shall, without any such licence or exemption, as is in this act allowed for that purpose, or unless he shall be resident at some other benefice of which he may be possessed, absent himself from such benefice, or from such house of residence, if any, for any period exceeding the space of three months together, or to be accounted at several times in any one year, he shall, when such absence shall exceed three months and not exceed six months, forfeit one-third part of the annual value of the benefice from which he shall so absent himself; and when such absence shall exceed six months and not exceed eight months, one half part of such annual value; and when such absence shall exceed eight months, two third parts of such annual value; and when such absence shall have been for the whole of the year, three fourth parts of such annual value.

Licence to reside out of the usual house, if unfit.

"XXXIII. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any bishop, upon application in writing by any spiritual person holding any benefice within his diocese whereon there shall be no house or no fit house of residence, by licence under his hand and seal, to be registered in the registry of the diocese, which the registrar is hereby required to do, to permit such person to reside in some fit and convenient house, although not belonging to such benefice, such house to be particularly described and specified in such licence, and for a certain time to be therein also specified, not exceeding the period by this act limited, and from time to time as such bishop may think fit, to renew such licence; and every such house shall be a legal house of residence for such specified time to all intents and purposes: provided always, that no such licence shall be granted to such spiritual person to reside in any house unless it be within three miles of the church or chapel of such benefice, nor in case such church or chapel be in any city, or market or borough town, unless such house be within two miles of such church or chapel.

"XXXIV. And whereas the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne have purchased, built, or procured, and may hereafter purchase, build, or procure, by way of benefaction or donation to poor benefices, houses not situate within the parishes or places wherein such benefices lie, but so near thereto as to be sufficiently convenient and suitable for the residence of the officiating ministers thereof; be it therefore enacted, that such houses, having been previously approved by the bishop of the diocese, by writing under his hand and seal duly registered in the registry of the diocese, shall be deemed the houses of residence belonging to such benefices to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

"XXXV. And be it enacted, that in all cases of rectories having vicarages endowed or perpetual curacies, the residence of the vicar or perpetual curate in the rectory house of such benefice shall be deemed a legal residence to all intents and purposes whatever; provided that the house belonging to the vicarage or perpetual curacy be kept in proper repair to the satisfaction of the bishop of the diocese.

"XXXVI. And be it enacted, that from and after the decease of any spiritual person holding any benefice to which a house of residence is annexed, and in which he shall have been residing at the time of his decease, it shall be lawful for the widow of such spiritual person to occupy such house for any period not exceeding two calendar months after the decease of such spiritual person, holding and enjoying therewith the curtilage and garden belonging to such house.

"XXXVII. And be it enacted, that no spiritual person, being head ruler of any college or hall within either of the universities of Oxford or Cambridge, or being warden of the university of Durham, or being head master of Eton, Winchester, or Westminster School, or principal or any professor of the East India College, having been appointed such principal or professor before the time of the passing of this act, and not having respectively more than one benefice with cure of souls, shall be liable to any of the penalties or forfeitures in this act contained for or on account of non-residence on any benefice.

"XXXVIII. And be it enacted, that no spiritual person being dean of any cathedral or collegiate church, during such time as he shall reside upon his deanery, and no spiritual person having or holding any professorship or any public readership in either of the said universities, while actually resident within the precincts of the university, and reading lectures therein, (provided always, that a certificate under the hand of the vice-chancellor or warden of the university, stating the fact of such residence, and of the due performance of such duties, shall in every such case be transmitted to the bishop of the diocese wherein the benefice held by such spiritual person is situate within six weeks after the thirty-first day of December in each year;) and no spiritual person serving as chaplain of the queen's or king's most excellent majesty, or of the queen dowager, or of any of the queen's or king's children, brethren, or sisters, during so long as he shall actually attend in the discharge of his duty as such chaplain in the household to which he shall belong: and no chaplain of any archbishop or bishop, whilst actually attending in the discharge of his duty as such chaplain; and no spiritual person actually serving as chaplain of the house of commons, or as clerk of the queen's or king's closet, or as a deputy clerk thereof, while any such person shall be actually attending and performing the functions of his office; and no spiritual person serving as chancellor or vicar general or commissary of any diocese, whilst exercising the duties of his office; or as archdeacon, while upon his visitation, or otherwise engaged in the exercise of his archidiaconal functions; or as dean or subdean, or priest or reader, in any of the queen's or king's royal chapels at Saint James's or Whitehall, or as reader in the queen's or king's private chapels at Windsor or elsewhere, or as preacher in any of the inns of court, or at the Rolls, whilst actually performing the duty of any such office respectively; and no spiritual person, being provost of Eton College, or warden of Winchester College, or master of the Charter House, or principal of Saint David's College, or principal of King's College, London, during the time for which he may be required to reside and shall actually reside therein respectively, shall be liable to any of the penalties or forfeitures in this act contained for or on account of non-residence on “XXXIX. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any spiritual person being prebendary, canon, priest, vicar, vicar choral, or minor canon in any cathedral or collegiate church, or being a fellow of one of the said colleges of Eton or Winchester, who shall reside and perform the duties of such office during the period for which he shall be required to reside and perform such duties by the charter or statutes of such cathedral or collegiate church or college, as the case may be, to account such residence as if he had resided on some benefice; provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to permit or allow any such prebendary, canon, priest, vicar, vicar choral, minor canon, or fellow, to be absent from any benefice on account of such residence and performance of duty for more than five months altogether in any one year, including the time of such residence on his prebend, canonry, vicarage, or fellowship; provided also, that it shall be lawful for any spiritual person having or holding any such office in any cathedral or collegiate church or college in which the year for the purposes of residence is accounted to commence at any other period than the first of January, and who may keep the periods of residence required for two successive years at such cathedral or collegiate church or college, in whole or in part, between the first of January and the thirty-first of December in any one year, to account such residence, although exceeding five months in the year, as reckoned from the first of January to the thirty-first of December, as if he had resided on some benefice, anything in this act contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

“XL. Provided always, that every spiritual person being in possession of any benefice at the time of the passing of this act, and entitled by the law previously in force to exemption from residence, or to apply for a licence for non-residence, shall, as to every such benefice, but not as to any after-taken benefice, be entitled to the same exemption from residence, and to the same capacity of applying for and obtaining a licence for non-residence, and to the same right of appeal, in case of refusal or revocation of a licence, to which he was entitled before the time of the passing of this act; and every bishop and other person empowered before the passing of this act to grant such licence to such spiritual person shall have the like power after the passing thereof, anything hereinbefore contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

“XLI. Provided also, and be it enacted, that every spiritual person having any house of residence upon his benefice, who shall not reside therein, shall, during such period or periods of non-residence, whether the same shall be for the whole or part of any year, keep such house of residence in good and sufficient repair; and in every such case it shall be lawful for the bishop to cause a survey of such house of residence to be made by some competent person, the costs of which, in case the house shall be found to be out of repair, shall be borne by such spiritual person; and if the surveyor shall report that such house of residence is out of repair, it shall be lawful for the bishop to issue his monition to the incumbent to put the same in repair, according to such survey and report, a copy of which shall be annexed to the monition; and every such non-resident spiritual person who shall not keep such house of residence in repair, and who shall not, upon such monition, and within one month after service of such monition, show cause to the contrary to the satisfaction of the bishop, or put such house in repair within the space of ten months, to the satisfaction of such bishop, shall be liable to all the penalties for non-residence imposed by this act during the period of such house of residence remaining out of repair, and until the same shall have been put in repair.

person approved by the bishop in that behalf, and shall state therein whether such spiritual person intends to perform the duty of his benefice in person, and in that case where and at what distance from the church or chapel of such benefice he intends to reside; and if he intends to employ a curate such petition shall state what salary he proposes to give to such curate, and whether the curate proposes to reside or not to reside in the parish in which such benefice is situate; and if the curate intends to reside therein, then whether in the house of residence belonging to such benefice, or in some and what other house, and if he does not intend to reside in the parish, then such petition shall state at what distance therefrom, and at what place, such curate intends to reside, and whether such curate serves any other and what parish as incumbent or curate, or has any and what cathedral preferment, and any and what benefice, or officiates in any other and what church or chapel; and such petition shall also state the annual value and the population of the benefice in respect of which any licence for non-residence shall be applied for, and the number of churches or chapels, if more than one, upon such benefice, and the date of the admission of such spiritual person to the said benefice; and it shall not be lawful for the bishop to grant any such licence unless such petition shall contain a statement of the several particulars aforesaid; and every such petition shall be filed in the registry of the diocese by the registrar thereof, and shall be open to inspection, and copies thereof made, with the leave in writing of the bishop.

"XLIII. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the bishop, upon such petition being presented to him, and upon such proofs being adduced as to any facts stated in any such petition as he may think necessary and shall require, to grant, in such cases as are hereinafter enumerated, in which he shall think fit to grant the same, a licence in writing under his hand for such spiritual person to reside out of the proper house of residence of his benefice, or out of the limits of his benefice, or out of the limits prescribed by this act, for the purpose of exempting such person from any pecuniary penalty in respect of any non-residence thereon; which licence shall express the cause of granting the same licence; (that is to say,) to any spiritual person who shall be prevented from residing in the proper house of residence or within the limits of such benefice, or within the limits prescribed by this act, by any incapacity of mind or body; and also for a period not exceeding six months to any spiritual person on account of the dangerous illness of his wife or child making part of his family, and residing with him as such; but that no such licence on account of the illness of a wife or child shall be renewed save with the allowance of the archbishop of the province previously signified under his hand in pursuance of a recommendation in writing from the bishop, setting forth the circumstances, proofs, and reasons which induce him to make such recommendation; and also to any spiritual person having or holding any benefice wherein there shall be no house of residence (1), or where the house of residence shall be unfit for the

"On the 22nd of February your appellant received from the Bishop of Gloucester a letter, of which the following is a copy.

"Palace, Gloucester, Feb. 20th, 1833.

"Reverend Sir,—In reply to your application for fresh licences of non-residence on your two livings of Frampton and Fretherne, I beg you to understand that I do not consider it as compatible with the proper discharge of my duty to permit both these parishes to continue longer without a residence for their incumbent; and that the ground upon which you rest your application, the want of a glebe-house in either, must be removed without any further delay by your building one.

"As I explained to you last year, in the course of a long conversation, the reasons which made me judge it indispensably requisite that this step should be taken, there is no occasion now to repeat them. At that time you urged circumstances of private convenience, which made you desire the postponement; and from my anxious wish to consult the interests of my clergy, I then consented to give you licences of non-residence for one year, in order to enable you to make arrangements for the purpose of building. This term having now elapsed, I do not feel justified in acquiescing in further delay. Since our last conversation on the subject of your residence, I have understood more fully the circumstances of the exchange of property which took place at Fretherne four or five years ago. You were then suffered to alienate the glebe-house from the benefice; but it was with the understanding that you were about to build another upon the land which the living received in exchange.

"As I should be very sorry that you should incur any unnecessary inconvenience, I think it right to let you know that my mind is entirely made up to enforce your residence, should any attempt be made, which I trust will not be the case, to resist this injunction.

"When you have commenced the building a house, I will give you licences of non-residence for the time which is required for its completion.

"I have the honour to be, reverend sir, your very faithful and humble servant,

"J. H. GLOUCESTER.

"Rev. J. H. Dunsford."

[The appellant then proceeds to detail his case at great length, but it has not been deemed expedient to print it, because all the facts have been commented upon in the reply of the Bishop of Gloucester.]

"My lord archbishop, your appellant is most anxious to bring this appeal to an end. He laments that he has been in a manner compelled to make this long reply to the Bishop of Gloucester's letter. His case is itself sufficiently simple: he petitions for licences of non-residence on his benefice, because his residence on either of them is impossible. Residence has always been impossible to appellant; residence is still impossible; residence would be impossible, even if appellant were to build under the powers of the Gilbert Act. Neither is this impossibility of residence occasioned by my negligence, default, or misconduct of appellant. He therefore humbly, yet confidently, solicits from your grace those licences of non-residence which the Bishop of Gloucester, not exercising a sound discretion, refuses to grant.

"And your petitioner will ever pray, &c. &c."

"To the Most Reverend William, by Divine Providence, Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, &c. &c."

"My Lord,—I have the honour of addressing you, in reply to an appeal which has been presented to your grace, by the Reverend James Hartley Dunsford, in consequence of my refusal to grant him fresh licences of non-residence on his two livings of Frampton, and Fretherne, in my diocese.

"My feelings upon this occasion are certainly painful; not on account of the subject of the appeal, which I am sincerely happy has been brought before your grace; not on account of the part which I have taken in the matter, since I wish it to be fully understood, and understood, being confident that my motives will, in spite of all misrepresentation, be properly appreciated; but because the complaint is couched in language and in a spirit inconsistent with the clerical character, and tending to bring scandal upon our church.

"The appeal of Mr. Dunsford consists almost entirely of a personal attack upon his diocesan; whom he is not satisfied with accusing of conduct that is illegal and irregular, (although that is all which his case could require,) but he attributes that conduct to 'hostility' against himself, and reiterates the charges of 'abusing his power,' of 'perverting the laws,' of 'episcopal tyranny,' and 'oppression;' as if he thought the perpetual repetition of such intemperate expressions, likely to give them greater weight with your grace; and, in order to make the violation of decency more flagrant, he mixes his reproachful charges with assertions and insults; forgetting that the individual on whom he throws all this contumely, is an person keeping such house of residence, if any, and the buildings belonging thereto, in good and sufficient repair and condition to the satisfaction of the bishop, and a whose station gives him a peculiar claim upon his respect: and that the personage to whom he addresses his jeers and banter, is no other than the spiritual head of our church establishment. I certainly never before heard or read of such an open contempt for the rules of decency and propriety, as the adoption of language of this description in a solemn document, addressed by a clergyman to the primate. What may have been the motives of the appellant, in filling his case with all these personalities, I am at a loss to conjecture. Undoubtedly, they do not tend to strengthen or recommend his own positions; and he could hardly expect that they would prejudice your grace in favour of his manners or principles.

"As far as I am myself concerned, the violence with which I am assailed, will prove perfectly harmless. My character is sufficient to shield me against the invectives of Mr. Dunsford: and his charges of unfair and hostile intentions, while they prove the spirit in which the appeal is made, are refuted by the facts of the case, even as they may be elicited from the statement of my accuser.

"The complaint against me must resolve itself into this:—I have refused to exert in the case of the incumbent of Frampton and Fretherne, the power entrusted to me by the act of parliament, 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 15, to exempt him from the penalties imposed by the law, for absence from both those livings. The power there given to the bishop is permissive; and is to be exercised or not, as he may judge, in his discretion, to be most conducive to the interests of the church, of which he is the guardian. If, therefore, I have done wrong in my refusal, I presume that my error is only an error in judgment; and it is one from which no injury can result to the complainant, since the merits of the case are now subjected to the revision of your grace. From my confidence in your experience and judgment, I am convinced, that if I have either taken a wrong view of the powers entrusted to me, or have made a wrong application of them in this instance, your grace will give him immediate relief, by granting the licences for which he prays.

"The case itself lies in a very small compass. I will, as briefly as I can, explain the reasons which induced me, after full and mature consideration of the subject, in all its bearings, to determine upon the course which I have adopted. Frampton is a benefice of 300*l.* a year, and contains a population of above one thousand inhabitants: it is, therefore, entitled to a house of residence for its minister; and a small annual reserve from the proceeds during the twenty years that Mr. Dunsford has received the emoluments of this living, would have enabled him to build or to purchase a competent one. At Fretherne there was, until lately, a parsonage house, which would, at all events, have been an adequate residence for a curate:

that house Mr. Dunsford has himself alienated from the living. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that, in strictness and propriety, a house for the minister ought to be built or procured in each pariah, at the expense of the person who has derived the profits, without performing the duties of the benefices. And when I consider the circumstances attending Mr. Dunsford's incumbency, they seem rather to strengthen and add to the reasons which should induce him to perform what is so plainly required by the parishes. The salary of the curate of Frampton would, according to the Curate's Act, be 150*l.* a year; but Mr. Dunsford, having been instituted in 1813, a few months before that act was passed, is exempt from its operations; and he has, accordingly, got the curacy served for little more than a third of that sum. The consideration which sometimes deters clergymen from expending money out of their private resources upon glebe-houses, cannot have any weight in his case; since he himself possesses the advowsons of both benefices; [This appears to be a misapprehension. Mr. Dunsford possessed the advowson only of one of the livings, Fretherne, to which he was instituted on his own petition. He was presented to the other, Frampton upon Severn, by his father, James Dunsford: to that circumstance must the mistake be attributed.] consequently, whatever sum the building might cost him, would be expended, not upon a life estate of precarious tenure, but in improving his own family property.

"Your grace will have observed that the appellant seems to consider that there are but two parties concerned in this question—the bishop and himself: and as the former is exerting his power to compel him to do that which 'he does not think fit to do,' he declares that he 'resists him upon principle.' He argues, throughout his appeal, as if he were not sensible that there is a third party whose interests are involved—I mean the parishioners—the persons whose souls have been solemnly entrusted to his care, and to whose spiritual welfare he is bound by the most sacred obligations to attend. It is for the benefit of the flock, and not of the incumbent, that his churches were endowed; and upon no other principle does he enjoy the fruits of the benefices. It is for the sake of the people, and of them only, that I felt it to be my duty to interfere, and endeavour to procure them a resident minister, who might be enabled to pay them the attention to which they are entitled. But for this consideration, Mr. Dunsford would never have had to complain of my urging him to steps which 'he does not think fit to take of himself.' In this point of view, the question now before your grace is of much importance. I have complaints brought to me from both the appellant's parishes, of the manner in which the services of the churches are performed. At Fretherne, which is deprived of all residence for a minister, it is certificate under the hand of two neighbouring incumbents, countersigned by the rural dean, if any, that no house convenient for the residence of such spiritual stated that for several weeks together, the single service of the church has been performed at half-past one o'clock on Sunday afternoon, an hour so obviously inconvenient to the parishioners, that no result can be looked for, except that they will be alienated altogether from their parish church. Having judged it my duty to call upon Mr. Dunsford to build at least one residence house on his preferment, I considered that a person who refused compliance with a reasonable and moderate requisition, could not expect from the bishop the favour of a continued exemption from the operation of the law, as it affects non-resident incumbents.

"The appellant urges two topics of a totally distinct nature: first, that it rests with the bishop, and not with himself, to build parsonage houses upon those livings, under the provisions of the Gilbert Act: secondly, that the magnitude of his family precludes his residence upon either living. The reply to both these positions is very short and simple.

"The first topic is that on which Mr. Dunsford dwells at great length, and with extraordinary vehemence of language. But I submit to your grace that it is not possible for him to have been serious in bringing this matter before you, as a charge against his diocesan. The power given to the bishops, of raising the money and directing the building, in case of the incumbent's refusal or neglect, can only be put in execution 'with the consent of the patron': such are the provisions of the act, as quoted by the complainant. And who is the patron in this instance? Why, Mr. Dunsford himself: and it was hardly to be expected that, after refusing to build himself, he would consent to the same thing being done by another, at the charge of his preferment, in a manner far less favourable to his property. But even supposing there were no such obstacle, that there were other and consenting patrons, yet the power possessed by the diocesan under sect. 8, of this act, is, like the power of granting licences of non-residence, not imperative, but permissive; to be exercised or not at his discretion: and from the circumstances of those two livings, as stated by the appellant himself, the exercise of such a power would plainly have been inexpedient; since in that mode of proceeding, the sum expended in each place could not have exceeded 600*l.*; an amount not sufficient to erect a house suitable to the living. But I shall detain your grace no longer in discussing a point, which never could have been seriously contemplated.

"The appellant lays great stress upon the extent of his family, as preventing his residence in any house which could be built or procured in either of his parishes. Upon this I have to remark, that if a clergyman, from any unavoidable cause, is precluded from paying that full and personal attention to his parish which the ministerial duty prescribes, it is peculiarly obligatory on him to effect all that does lie in his power for the benefit of that parish, in order that it may suffer as little as possible by his default. Thus, in the present instance, if he is prevented from residing himself, it is morally incumbent on him to take care that his curate has a house which may enable him to live among the parishioners. The appellant frequently recurs to this topic; and in more than one place, says, that 'the Bishop of Gloucester is fully aware of the impossibility of his residence on either of his livings:' and that 'the position of his affairs is well known to him.' I beg leave to assure your grace, that I have no knowledge whatever about Mr. Dunsford's family or his affairs, except what I obtain from his own account of them, which he has given in minute detail in the appeal before you. But I am by no means convinced of 'the impossibility of his residence;' I admit that it may be attended with inconvenience, and occasion some change in the habits of life to which he alludes. But I know of no situation in any profession, where a person has not inconveniences, more or less important, to which he must submit. In our profession it very seldom happens that any individual, be his situation what it may can choose his place of residence. Mr. Dunsford is quite mistaken in thinking, that 'the final cost of building a house is seldom less than double the first calculation:' such a result may happen from negligence or ignorance; but that it is neither necessary nor frequent, I know from my own experience, as well as from my observation among the incumbents of my diocese. I cannot admit that some of the apartments mentioned by the appellant, for instance, two school-rooms, a justice-room, and spare bed-rooms for visitors, however convenient they may be, are required in the residence of a parochial clergyman. And where there is a large family of children it is rarely found that they are all at home at the same time. A clergyman may have to make some sacrifices, in order to discharge his duty by living among his flock: but they are such as he ought not to regard for a moment, in competition with the higher questions which are involved.

"In relation to this subject, it is necessary to notice a misapprehension on the part of Mr. Dunsford, as to what passed in conversation between us early in the year 1837; he says, 'His lordship at that time acknowledged the impracticability of appellant's residence, and was graciously pleased to promise him that he should not be called to reside, if he would consent to build. In fact, that he might purchase continued licences of non-residence, during his own incumbency, at the price of building for the curate or future incumbents.' I can assure your grace, that I never promised this, or any thing to this effect: nor did I make any promise at all, except to grant licences for the time of building. I never acknowledged the impracticability of Mr. Dunsford's residence; (that being a matter which would depend upon the capacity of the house, in reference to the amount of his family;) but I was desirous in this, as well as in every other case, of doing the utmost that was consistent with a proper discharge of my duty, to prevent a clergyman being subjected to distress or inconvenience: and I probably intimidated, (what I certainly designed,) that in case of his doing that which I thought was incumbent upon him to execute, without delay, I should be disposed to extend the licences, while the circumstances of his family continued to require such an indulgence.

"The appellant has not thought it irreverent or unbecoming to furnish your grace with a burlesque account, in the shape of a pretended dialogue, of what passed at this interview. Upon this conduct of his I shall offer no comment. As it regards myself, I am well satisfied that neither your grace, nor any person who knows me, will believe that I used the expressions put into my mouth in that fictitious colloquy, or any expressions which in language or meaning were equivalent to them. The arguments which I did urge, were addressed to the sense that I presumed a clergyman to entertain of the solemn responsibility which he had voluntarily incurred when he undertook the care of parishes, and of the duty which he owed to his parishioners and to the church. I was sorry to observe at the time that they made no impression, and he appears now to have forgotten them; or perhaps the mention of such topics only gave him that contemptible opinion which he tells your grace that 'he formed of his diocesan's reasoning powers and talents for business.' The interview was as unsatisfactory to me as it could possibly be to the appellant.

"Mr. Dunsford chooses to dispute the ground upon which at that time I granted him licences for one year: but of the views which guided my own conduct he must surely allow me to be the best judge. I gave the licences upon his representation that the delay of a year might, from private circumstances, (into the nature of which I forebore to inquire,) enable him to build a house without any inconvenience. That act was intended by me as an accommodation and kindness to him, and as nothing else. He says, 'In fact, the transaction was in the nature of a truce for a year.' This term is totally inapplicable, and is not very decorous, as implying the existence of a state of warfare. I felt no hostility to him, and I was not aware that he entertained any towards myself. Had it been intimated that my right to withhold licences in this case was likely to be disputed, it is not conceivable that I should have chosen to interpose the delay of a year, or even of a day, before such a question was brought to an issue.

"The appellant, however, sought another interview on the 23rd of last February, and informs your grace, that 'this interview his lordship, with singular discourtesy, refused to grant.' When he made this accusation, he must have forgotten that he had himself, in the preceding page of his appeal, supplied its refutation, by copying for your grace's perusal the very letter which I wrote in reply to his request. In this you will see that I did not refuse the interview, but only suggested my opinion of its inutility, and intimated my preference of a written communication upon any new topics which he might wish to bring before me. Had I, indeed, believed him capable of inventing speeches and quotations to be put into the mouth of his diocesan, I should have declined any conversation with him, except in the presence of witnesses, who might take minutes of what passed. As it was, I designed only to save him the needless trouble of a journey to Gloucester, and to obtain that mode of communication which would enable me to give to the topics urged, due weight and consideration. But had he chosen to call upon me, I should have seen him, as I do all clergymen who call every day in the week, within certain hours; and your grace would, in that case, probably have received from the appellant another travesty of a dialogue supposed to have taken place between us. While the appellant is making against me this most unfounded charge of 'discourtesy,' he seems to forget a fact which his own narrative reveals. It was on February 23rd that he wrote to your grace to announce his intention of appealing; and on the same day he wrote to me to desire an interview for the purpose of 'inducing me,' he says, 'to abandon my illegal line of conduct.' Surely, not only courtesy, but common fairness and candour, required that he should have informed me of his having taken that step. With what propriety could I have opened with him a new discussion upon a subject which was already brought under the jurisdiction of your grace?

"Mr. Dunsford talks about a letter written by me to the rector of Slimbridge, (the parish where he is curate,) in a paragraph which contains some of the most intemperate expressions to be found in the whole appeal. He first gives as a quotation, a sentence not to be found in that letter; and, after declaiming against me for what I had not written, he demands, in an imperious tone, an explanation of my meaning. Not being disposed to attend to requisitions of such a nature, I should not have noticed this paragraph at all, were it not so expressed that it might seem as if I had ventured to anticipate the result of the present appeal to your grace. The fact is, that as I happened to be writing to the rector of Slimbridge, on the 15th of last January, upon another occasion, I thought it right to apprise him of the state of affairs, as far as it concerned him to know them. At that time Mr. Dunsford's licences of non-residence had actually expired: I had not received any application for new ones, or any intimation that such an application was intended; still less did I apprehend that an appeal would holding any benefice, and occupying in the same parish any mansion or messuage whereof he shall be the owner, a licence to reside in such mansion or messuage, be the consequence of their being refused; and the usual time of applying for renewal of expiring licences had passed. Knowing that he must either reside on one of his benefices, or be subject to the penalties of non-residence, I concluded he would adopt the former alternative. The mention of Lady-day was only a suggestion of my own; I merely said, that it might probably be the most convenient for all parties that the change should take place at that period. This was far from being a mysterious communication; I naturally concluded that the person to whom it was addressed, would communicate with his curate on the subject.

"The alienation of the glebe-house at Fretherne is a matter into which I trust your grace will pardon my declining to enter. The transaction took place before my time, and my knowledge of it must of course be derived from others. I can only say, that the effect of the appellant's statement upon my mind, is to convince me that the account which I had received, and which I mentioned to himself in my letter, is the true one. To his criticism on my words 'suffered,' and 'understanding,' I can only reply that I used those terms in their common acceptation, and that, instead of any 'mystification' or 'ingenious obscurity,' I described the circumstance (as I had learned it) in the plainest and simplest way that I could. But on this subject I have humbly to beg that your grace will be pleased to ask the testimony of the then diocesan, the present Bishop of Bangor; and that, should his lordship not have a perfect recollection of the nature of the transaction, and the views with which he gave his consent, your grace will direct such questions to be put to the rural dean, and the commissioners engaged in the exchange, as may enable you to judge with precision on the matter.

"I have now noticed every part of Mr. Dunsford's appeal which has any bearing upon the real question in dispute. Your grace will have observed, in the perusal of that document, that the object of the appellant is not so much to establish any point in his own favour, as to indulge in a railing accusation against his bishop. He sets out by assuming that my conduct is illegal, and having so done, he proceeds to denounce it as being also 'base,' 'tyrannical,' and 'oppressive;' his declamation becoming more violent and exaggerated as he proceeds, but containing not one atom of evidence to substantiate so heinous a charge. . . .

"Before I leave this subject, I humbly request your grace to take such cognizance as you shall judge right of the outrageous language of the appellant. Although his design may be nothing more than to cast affront and contumely upon myself, yet it is certain that the adoption of such a style, upon a solemn occasion, constitutes a contempt of the judge to whose jurisdiction he has appealed. I submit also, that this demeanour towards superiors is inconsistent with the clerical character, is incompatible with all notion of church government, and is in direct opposition to the very elements of Christian discipline. Whatever be the result of the present appeal, the relation which subsists between the appellant and myself will continue; and I do not see how even the ordinary intercourse between a bishop and a clergyman can take place, where the latter feels himself at liberty to express the most contumelious and contemptuous sentiments in regard to his superior—a licence which is even the solemnity of the present occasion, nor the dignity of the highest character in the church, has been able to restrain.

"In conclusion, I beg leave to declare that there is in my mind no hostility to Mr. Dunsford. I feel obliged to him for having been the means of bringing this question before your grace. I sincerely wish him a better and more Christian spirit than that with which he appears at present to be actuated; and I hope, for his own sake, that he will some time or other feel compassion and remorse for the bitter and unprovoked personalities of which his present appeal has been made the vehicle.

"I have the honour to be, with all respect, my lord archbishop, your grace's dutiful and humble servant, non-residence on his said benefice of Frampton upon Severn.

"And your petitioner will ever pray, &c. &c."

"To the Most Reverend the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, &c. &c."

"My Lord,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a second appeal made to your grace by the Rev. James Hartley Dunsford, complaining of my having refused him a licence of non-residence on his vicarage of Frampton upon Severn, in the diocese of Gloucester.

"This appeal differs essentially from the former, inasmuch as it omits all mention of the appellant's other living of Fretherne. What the object of this alteration is, I cannot comprehend, unless it is intended that your grace should receive distinct applications, from the vicar of Frampton and the rector of Fretherne as from different personages. At all events, it places Mr. Dunsford in a position different from his actual one; and at the same time removes the principal ground upon which I refused the licence.

"Having, in my reply to the first appeal, explained the reasons which actuated me in the refusal of the application to grant Mr. Dunsford renewed licences of absence from both his livings, it is unnecessary to trouble your grace with a repetition of them. It was my duty to look at the case as it actually stood. I found the appellant a pluralist, who did not reside in, or do the duty of, either of his parishes, and who had alienated the glebe-house which belonged to one of them. It was impossible to detach these considerations from the question upon which I had to exercise the discretion vested in me by the law. I could not regard it as if the vicar of Frampton and the rector of Fretherne were two distinct personages. Nor is it possible for your grace to form a judgment on the propriety with which I came to my decision, without taking into consideration the position of the appellant as a pluralist, in relation to both his benefices. In regard, therefore, to the merits of the question, I beg leave respectfully to refer your grace to my former reply.

"The appellant says, that I have called upon him to build a house of residence, implying of course at Frampton, for no allusion is made to any other place. That this statement is inaccurate, your grace is aware from the documents laid before you by the appellant in his first appeal.

"In the new appeal there is only one sentence which requires any notice from me. The appellant says, 'that he hath petitioned the Bishop of Gloucester for licence of non-residence on his said benefice, on the ground of there being no house of residence, which ground is recognised by the 15th sect. of 1 Geo. 3, c. 99, as a legitimate ground of non-residence.'

"To this statement of the law comprised in the section referred to, I must pointedly object. A legitimate ground of non-residence implies, in common language, 'a legal exemption from residence.' But the purport of the law is very different. It recognises the want of a house of residence merely as a ground on which the bishop is empowered to grant a licence, exempting the incumbent from the penalties of non-residence, in such cases only, 'in which, upon due consideration of all the circumstances,' he 'shall in his discretion think it fit to grant the same.' It is hardly possible for words to be devised which should more clearly express the intention of the law, or be less open to cavil or misapprehension. The want of a house is not recognised as a legitimate ground of non-residence, it is only a ground on which the bishop has a discretionary power of granting a licence, if, after considering all the circumstances stated in the application, and verified to his satisfaction, he shall in his discretion think it a fitting case for such a favour and indulgence. As the giving or withholding this favour is thus left to the discretion of the bishop, the law has properly given a power of appeal to the primate, by whom the bishop's exercise of his discretion may be confirmed or reversed, after an inquiry into the circumstances of the case. Whatever may be your grace's judgment upon the manner in which this discretion has been exercised by myself, I must humbly contend, that in considering the whole case, and deciding in such a mode as my own judgment told me was best for the interests of the church, I have only discharged my bounden duty.

"I apprehend, that I should have complied neither with the spirit nor the letter of the law, had I not duly considered all the circumstances of the case, and among the rest, the appellant's other living of Fretherne, which the present appeal puts aside.

"I presume, that I am not expected to declare what I would have done in a supposed case. Had the appellant held no other preferment than his vicarage of Frampton, and had I been satisfied that he had used his best endeavours to obtain a residence in that parish, agreeably to the oath which he took at his institution, then the case would have been so widely different from that which actually came before me, that all discussion of it is superfluous. I shall, therefore, only remark, that even in that case, I could not have granted the licence of non-residence, upon the petition presented to me by Mr. Dunsford; the original of which I inclose to your grace: you will observe, that it is not a legal one, as it contained no mention of the place where the curate was to reside. Had no such objection been in the way, I should have felt it right to require that the asserted impossibility of his residing in his parish, should be proved to my satisfaction, in the manner which the act has prescribed. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any bishop, in any case not hereinbefore enumerated, in which such bishop shall think it expedient, to grant to any spiritual person holding any benefice within his diocese a licence to reside out of the limits of such benefice; provided always, that in every such case the nature and special circumstances thereof, and the reasons that have induced such bishop to grant such licence, shall be forthwith transmitted to the archbishop of the province, who shall forthwith proceed therein as hereinafter provided in cases of appeal, and shall allow or disallow such licence in the whole or in part, or make any alteration therein, as to the period for which the same may have been granted or otherwise; and no such licence shall be valid unless it shall have been so allowed by such archbishop, such allowance thereof being signified by the signing thereof by such archbishop; provided also, that it shall not be necessary in such licence to specify the cause of granting the same.

“XLV. And be it enacted, that during the vacancy of any see the power of granting licences of non-residence under this act, subject to the regulations herein contained, shall be exercised by the guardian of the spiritualities of the diocese; or in case the bishop of any diocese shall be disabled from exercising in person the functions of his office, such power shall be exercised by the person or persons lawfully empowered to exercise his general jurisdiction in the diocese; provided always, that no licence granted by any other than the bishop shall be valid until ford relies upon the excuse of his being unable to procure a house suitable to his family. It appears, however, from his own statement, that he has been non-resident more than twenty years, during the early part of which period, his family was very small, and he probably could have procured a suitable house, had it been his wish to attend to his parish.

“As Mr. Dunsford’s case has been so long before your grace, I should be sorry to interpose any difficulty which might prevent or delay its adjudication. But it will be proper here to mention, that should he prefer any more appeals, I shall not reply to or notice them, any further than to protest against their legality, unless he complies with the positive provisions of the law, in giving security for the payment of reasonable expenses. I have no personal interest in the matter of these appeals: and the act of parliament, being designed to be impartial, extends a protection to the bishop, as well as to the incumbent, which I shall not feel myself justified in foregoing.

“To His Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.”

“WE, WILLIAM, by Divine Providence, Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Metropolitan, having carefully read two several petitions and appeals, lately made to us, by the Reverend JAMES HARTLEY DUNSFORD, Clerk, THE ONE in consequence of the refusal by the Right Reverend JAMES HENRY Lord Bishop of Gloucester, to grant to him licences for his non-residence on his Vicarage of Frampton-upon-Severn, in the county and diocese of Gloucester, and on his Rectory of Fretherne in the same county and diocese, and praying us to grant him licences for his non-residence on the said rectory and vicarage; AND THE OTHER of the said petitions and appeals being in consequence of such refusal by the said lord bishop, to grant to the said James Hartley Dunsford, a licence for his non-residence on his said Vicarage of Frampton-upon-Severn only, and praying us to grant to him a licence for his non-residence on the said vicarage. And we, the said archbishop, having well weighed and considered the merits and circumstances of the said several petitions and appeals, and made inquiry into the same, and being of opinion, that the said Lord Bishop of Gloucester hath exercised a due discretion, in refusing to grant licences for the non-residence of the said James Hartley Dunsford on the said Vicarage of Frampton-upon-Severn, and the Rectory of Fretherne, or either of them, have thought it proper to confirm such refusal; and, accordingly, we do by virtue of the power and authority vested in us as archbishop, as aforesaid, by the act of parliament in that case made and provided, accordingly confirm the refusal by the said Lord Bishop of Gloucester to grant such licences for the non-residence of the said James Hartley Dunsford on his said vicarage and rectory respectively.

the archbishop of the province shall have signified his approbation of the grant of such licence by signing the same.

“XLVI. And be it enacted, that no licence for non-residence granted under this act or under the said hereinbefore second recited act shall continue in force after the thirty-first day of December in the year next after the year in which such licence shall have been or shall be granted.

“XLVII. And be it enacted, that every person obtaining any licence of non-residence shall pay for the same to the secretary or officer of the bishop, or other person granting the same, the sum of ten shillings, over and above the stamp duty chargeable thereon, and no more, and also the sum of three shillings, and no more, to the registrar of the diocese, and shall also pay the sum of five shillings to the secretary of the archbishop when any such licence shall have been signed by such archbishop.

“XLVIII. And be it enacted, that no licence of non-residence shall become void by the death or removal of the bishop granting the same, but the same shall be and remain valid, notwithstanding any such death or removal, unless the same shall be revoked as hereinafter mentioned.

“XLIX. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any archbishop or bishop who shall have granted any licence of non-residence as aforesaid, or for any successor of any such archbishop or bishop, after having given such incumbent sufficient opportunity of showing reason to the contrary, in any case in which there may appear to such archbishop or bishop good cause for revoking the same, by an instrument in writing under his hand to revoke any such licence; provided always, that any such incumbent may, within one month after service upon him of such revocation, if by a bishop, appeal to the archbishop of the province, who shall confirm or annul such revocation as to him shall appear just and proper.

“L. And be it enacted, that every bishop who shall grant or revoke any licence of non-residence under this act shall and he is hereby required, within one month after the grant or revocation of such licence, to cause a copy of every such licence or revocation to be filed in the registry of his diocese; and an alphabetical list of such licences and revocations shall be made out by the registrar of such diocese, and entered in a book, and kept for the inspection of all persons, upon payment of three shillings, and no more; and a copy of every such licence, and a statement in writing of the grounds of exemption, shall be transmitted by the spiritual person to whom such licence shall have been granted, or who may be exempted from residence, to the churchwardens or chapelwardens of the parish or place to which the same relates, within one month after the grant of such licence, or of his taking advantage of such exemption, as the case may be; and every bishop revoking any such licence shall cause a copy of such revocation to be transmitted, within one month after the revocation thereof, to the churchwardens or chapelwardens of the parish or place to which it relates; which copies of licences and revocation, and statements of exemption, shall be by such churchwardens or chapelwardens deposited in the parish chest, and shall likewise be produced by them, and publicly read by the registrar or other officer, at the visitation of the ecclesiastical district within which such benefice shall be locally situate next succeeding the receipt thereof; and every spiritual person who shall neglect so to transmit a copy of such licence or statement of exemption, as hereby required, shall lose all benefit of such licence, and until he shall have transmitted such statement, shall not be entitled to the benefit of such exemption; provided always, that in case the archbishop of the province shall on appeal to him annul the revocation of any such licence, the bishop by whom such revocation shall have been made shall, immediately on receiving notice from the archbishop that he has annulled the same, order, by writing under his hand, that the copies of such revocation shall be forthwith withdrawn from the said registry and parish chest, and that the same shall not be produced and read at the visitation, and that such revocation shall be erased from the list of revocations in the said registry; which order shall be binding on the registrar and churchwardens respectively to whom the same shall be addressed.

(1) Necessary expenses of serving the cure.—In Dakins (Clerk) v. Seaman (Clerk), (9 M. & W. 777,) it was held, that where a curate is appointed by the special sequestrators of the bishop of the diocese, to serve the cure of a benefice during the vacation between the death of the last and the appointment of the next incumbent, he may, although not licensed by the bishop, and notwithstanding Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, recover his reasonable stipend in an action of debt under Stat. 28 Hen. 8, c. 11, from the next incumbent, the tithes which accrued during the interval not being sufficient to pay him a reasonable stipend:—Mr. Baron Parke stating, “I am of opinion, that the plaintiff may maintain an action for his stipend. The main question is, whether the statute of Henry the Eighth is repealed by the statute of Victoria, and whether the curate can recover in a court of common law. It is to be observed, that as the words of the latter act are affirmative, both statutes are compatible, and may well stand together. The language of the statute of Victoria affords strong ground for the argument, that as the courts of common law cannot determine what salary the curate is to receive, so neither can they assist him in recovering it; and undoubtedly that argument applies, where the curate is appointed under that act; but if the curate is not appointed by the bishop, the statute of Henry the Eighth remains in full force and effect. It is said, that the canon law requires the curate to be licensed, but I should have great difficulty in determining, that the effect of the statute of Henry the Eighth is taken away by the canons of 1603; that question, however, need not be considered here; for I am not satisfied that the plaintiff need be licensed under the 48th canon. A licence applies to the case, where the appointment is permanent, but here the plaintiff is employed by the sequestrators, and is not appointed for any specified time. The sequestrators are to see, that the duties of the parish are performed by somebody, and accordingly they appoint the plaintiff for a short period; it may not, perhaps, be necessary for them to provide for more than two Sundays. Under the circumstances of the present case, I think the plaintiff is entitled to our judgment.”

(1) Sequestrator:—The sequestrator of a benefice, appointed by the bishop under a writ of sequestrari facias, is the mere bailiff or agent of the bishop, and has no such interest in the profits as will enable him to maintain an action at law against a party who wrongfully receives them: thus in Harding v. Hall, (10 M. & W. 42,) Mr. Baron Parker observed, "I agree in opinion with my Lord Chief Baron, that in this case the nonsuit was right, and I still entertain the same opinion which I expressed when this matter was argued before me at Nisi Prius.

"The action was brought to recover certain profits of a living, which came to the hands of the defendants at different times. It appears that a person of the name of Iveson was the sequestrator under an execution at his suit, on two different judgments. He employed a person of the name of Collett to receive the profits of the living under the sequestration. Iveson became bankrupt, and his assignees still continued Collett in their employ, to receive the profits of the living. Iveson afterwards died, the assignees still continuing, through the agency of Collett, to receive the profits of the living: and they are now called upon to pay over the whole of those profits which had been received by Collett; those which came to their hands while Iveson was sequestrator, those received after his bankruptcy, and those received since the death of Iveson, by the assignees, by the agency of Collett. If there were any portion of those profits which could be the subject of an action by the sequestrator, I was wrong in directing a nonsuit.

"It seems to me, that there is no difficulty whatever in the case, except in regard of that portion of the profits which have been received by the assignees, after the determination of the sequestration to Iveson, by his death. There is no doubt what the character of a sequestrator is, and that it is one that cannot pass to his executors, administrators, or assigns; and therefore, if the plaintiff was entitled to recover as to that portion of the tithes received by the assignees since the death of Iveson, I ought not to have directed a nonsuit, but a verdict for the plaintiff, subject to the other questions in the cause.

"But it appears to me, that even for that portion of the profits of the living the plaintiff cannot recover; for the right which the sequestration gave him involves no interest whatever. Let us consider, what the right of the sequestrator is. When a judgment is obtained against a spiritual person, a levari facias issues to the bishop, and he is commanded, as in this case, 'to enter into the rectory and parish church of Lock-ington, and take and sequester the same into his possession, and hold the same in his possession until he shall have levied the debt and damages, costs and charges, out of the rents, tithes, oblations, obventions, fruits, issues, and profits thereof, and other ecclesiastical goods in his diocese,' and so forth. Therefore the command is to the bishop to enter and take possession of the living; and the bishop appoints a sequestrator to make such entry. Then the publication of the sequestration takes place; and the question is, what is the effect of this delegation by the bishop? The effect clearly is, to take the possession out of the rector, and to place it in some person in lieu of the rector. In the case of Doe d. Morgan (Clerk) v. Black, 3 Camp. 447,) it was decided that, after the publication, the right of ejectionment by the rector is taken away; therefore I assume, that the possession is vested in some other person: and the question is, who is the person so put into possession? It is the bishop, according to the terms of this writ, and nobody else. He directs the sequestrator to act for him; and though clothed with duties higher than those an ordinary bailiff has,—for he has undoubtedly more than to do, by consent of the bishop, differ from the duties of the sheriff's bailiff,—in point of law he is the servant of the bishop, and has no interest at all in any of the profits of the living, but is acting merely as a receiver. That, as it appears to me, is the character of the sequestrator, and that is the character which he appears to have had according to the cases. Thus, according to the case of Jones v. Barrett, (Bamb. 192) the sequestrator, having no interest in the profits of the living, cannot alone sue for tithes, or for the profits of the rectory, but the bishop is the proper person to do so. There is no authority whatever to shew that the sequestrator has any interest in the profits of the living. A case was cited from Barnardiston's Reports, of Culder v. Ros, (1 Barnard. K.B. 198,) which was erroneously made use of by Mr. Baker, as an able argument, to shew, that if the party have authority, not merely to receive but to distribute, he has an interest in the profits of the sequestration, and may support the action. But the case is no authority for that position: it is only the opinion of the lord chancellor as to what the Scotch law probably was in the case of the sequestration of the effects of a convicted traitor; and he gave an opinion, that if it was only to receive in that case he would have no interest, but if it was to distribute amongst the different creditors, without rendering any account to the court, it gave him a title to recover. It is paid to such spiritual person; and every such sequestrator at the suit of the bishop, is hereby required, upon receiving an order under the hand of such bishop, forthwith to obey the same; and the said treasurer is hereby authorized and required, upon receiving a like order from such bishop, to make such payment out of any money in his hands; provided always, that any such spiritual person may, within one month after service upon him of the order for any such sequestration, appeal to the archbishop of the province, who shall make such order relating thereto, or to the profits that shall have been so sequestered as aforesaid, for the return of the same or any part thereof to such spiritual person, or to such sequestrator at the suit of any creditor, (as the case may be,) or otherwise as may appear to such archbishop to be just and proper; but nevertheless such sequestration shall be in force during such appeal.

not intended to be laid down, as a general proposition of law, that if a person is appointed a receiver, where there may be conferred upon him an authority, not merely to receive, but also to distribute, that would give him an interest in the estate. The case cannot be carried to that extent: and there is no other authority for saying, that a sequestrator has an interest in the subject-matter of the sequestration.

“Then, it was contended, that this was like the case of an administrator. But his authority is founded on the statute of 31 Edw. 3, St. I. c. 11, [ante 66,] which expressly states, that the ordinary is to depute persons, who are to have actions to recover debts due to a deceased intestate. That gives an interest, by the very words of the statute, in all the personal effects of the deceased, and takes them out of the bishop and vests them in the administrator. It is by an express law, therefore, that an administrator has an interest in the effects of the intestate. Therefore, even as to that portion of the profits of the living that may be said to be analogous to the case put in the argument, of the tithe grower having set out tithes, and the intervention of a stranger to take them away, I am compelled by the authorities, and by the nature of the case, to say, that no right of action would exist in the sequestrator. It appears to me, that the right would be in somebody else, either in the rector or in the ordinary, probably in the ordinary, since, according to the case of Doe d. Morgan v. Bluck, (3 Camp. 447,) the effect of the sequestration is to put the rector out of possession; and then it follows that the ordinary is in possession, in virtue of the writ by which he is required to take possession. Then I consider, that the sequestrator is the mere servant of the ordinary, and subject to his authority.

“The cases that have been cited from the Ecclesiastical Reports, of the sequestrator being called upon to account in the courts of the ordinary, for not performing his duties, are to be explained on the ground, that there the ordinary was calling his own officer to account for not performing the duties he had undertaken to do, he having received a warrant to act upon his mandate.

“Upon the whole, it appears to me, that this action cannot be sustained, and therefore that the nonsuit was right.”

“LVII. And be it enacted, that in every case in which any archbishop or bishop shall think proper, after proceeding by monition for the recovery of any penalty under this act for non-residence of more than one third part of the yearly value of any benefice for any non-residence exceeding six months in the year, to remit the whole or any part of any such penalty, such archbishop shall forthwith transmit to her majesty in council, and such bishop shall forthwith transmit to the archbishop of the province to which he belongs, a statement of the nature and special circumstances of each case, and the reasons for the remission of any such penalty: and it shall thereupon be lawful for her majesty in council, or for the archbishop, as the case may be, to allow or disallow such remission in whole or in part, in the same manner as is provided in this act with relation to the allowance or disallowance of licences of non-residence granted in cases not hereinbefore expressly enumerated; provided always, that the decision of the archbishop with respect to cases transmitted to him from a bishop shall be final.

“LVIII. And be it enacted, that if the benefice of any spiritual person shall continue for the space of one whole year under sequestration issued under the provisions of this act for disobedience to the bishop's monition or order requiring such spiritual person to reside on his benefice, or if such spiritual person shall, under the provisions of this act, incur two such sequestrations in the space of two years, and shall not be relieved with respect to either of such sequestrations upon appeal, such benefice shall thereupon become void; and it shall be lawful for the patron of such benefice to make donation or to present or nominate to the same as if such spiritual person were dead, and the bishop, on such benefice so becoming void, shall give notice in writing under his hand to such patron, which notice shall either be delivered to such patron or left at his usual place of abode, or if such patron or place of abode shall be unknown, or shall be out of England, such notice shall be twice inserted in the London Gazette, and also twice in some newspaper printed and usually circulated in London, and in some other newspaper usually circulated in the neighbourhood of the place where such benefice is situate; and for the purposes of lapse the avoidance of the benefice shall be reckoned from the day on which such notice shall have been delivered as aforesaid, or from the day on which six months shall have expired after the second publication of such notice in the London Gazette, as the case may be; and every such notice in the Gazette and newspapers shall state that the patron or the place of abode of the patron is unknown, or that he is said to be out of England, as the case may be, and that the benefice will lapse, at the furthest, after the expiration of one year from the second publication thereof as aforesaid; and upon any such avoidance it shall not be lawful for the patron to appoint by donation or present or nominate to such benefice so avoided the person by reason of whose non-residence the same was so avoided.

“LIX. And be it enacted, that any agreement made for the letting of the house of residence, or the buildings, gardens, orchards, or appurtenances necessary for the convenient occupation of the same, belonging to any benefice, to which house of residence any spiritual person may be required, by order of the bishop as aforesaid, to proceed and to reside therein, or which may be assigned or appointed as a residence to any curate by the bishop, shall be made in writing, and shall contain a condition for avoiding the same, upon a copy of such order, assignment, or appointment being served upon the occupier thereof, or left at the house, and otherwise shall be null and void; and a copy of every such order, assignment, or appointment shall immediately on the issuing thereof be transmitted to one of the churchwardens of the parish, or such other person as the bishop shall think fit, and be by him forthwith served on the occupier of such house of residence, or left at the same; and any person continuing to hold any such house of residence, or any such building, garden, orchard, or appurtenances, after the day on which such spiritual person shall be directed by such order to reside in such house of residence, or which shall be specified in any such order, assignment, or appointment, and after such copy shall be so served or left as aforesaid, shall forfeit the sum of forty shillings for every day he shall, without the permission of the bishop in writing under his hand for that purpose obtained, wilfully continue to hold any such house, building, garden, orchard or appurtenances, together with the expense of serving or leaving such order, assignment, or appointment, to be allowed by the bishop issuing the order or making such assignment or appointment; and it shall also be lawful for the spiritual person so directed to reside, or the curate to whom any such residence is assigned, to apply to any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the place for a warrant for the taking possession thereof; and the justice to whom any such order for such possession is produced shall and he is hereby required, upon its being duly verified, to grant a warrant to some peace officer to deliver such possession, and possession may thereupon be taken of such house under such warrant at any time in the daytime, by entering the same by force, if necessary, without any other proceeding by ejectment or otherwise, any law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding; provided that any person who shall have been in possession of any such house of residence or premises under a verbal agreement only, or under any agreement in which the condition aforesaid for avoiding the same shall not be inserted, and who shall be turned out of possession by virtue of this act, shall be entitled to sue the person with whom he or she had entered into such agreement for damages occasioned by his or her being so turned out of possession, to be recovered in any of her majesty's superior courts at Westminster.

“LX. Provided always, and be it enacted, that no spiritual person shall be liable to any penalty for not residing in any such house of residence during such time as such tenant shall continue to occupy such house of residence or other building or appurtenances necessary to the occupation of the same.

“LXI. And be it enacted, that no oath shall be required of or taken by any vicar in relation to residence on his vicarage; any law, custom, constitution, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

“LXII. And be it enacted, that upon or at any time after the avoidance of any benefice it shall be lawful for the bishop and he is hereby required to issue a commission to four beneficed clergymen of his diocese, or if the benefice be within his peculiar jurisdiction, but locally situate in another diocese, then to four beneficed clergymen of such last-mentioned diocese, one of whom shall be the rural dean (if any) of the rural deanery or district wherein such benefice shall be situate, directing them to inquire whether there is a fit house of residence within such benefice, and what are the annual profits of such benefice, and if the clear annual profits of such benefice exceed one hundred pounds whether a fit house of residence can be conveniently provided on the glebe of such benefice, or otherwise; and if the said commissioners, or any three of them, shall report in writing under their hands to the said bishop that there is no fit house of residence within such benefice, and that the clear annual profits of such benefice exceed one hundred pounds, and that a fit house of residence can be conveniently provided on the glebe of such benefice, or on any land which can be conveniently procured for the site of such house of residence, it shall be lawful for the said bishop and he is hereby required to procure from some skilful and experienced workman or surveyor a certificate containing a statement of the condition of the buildings (if any), and of the value of the timber and other materials (if any) thereupon fit to be employed in building or repairing, or to be sold, and also a plan or estimate of the work fit and proper to be done for building or repairing such house of residence, with all necessary and convenient offices, and thereupon, by mortgage of the glebe, tithes, rents, rent-charges, and other profits and emoluments, arising or to arise from such benefice, to levy and raise such sum or sums as the said estimate shall amount to, after deducting the value of any timber or other materials which may be thought proper to be sold, not exceeding four years net income and produce of such benefice, after deducting all outgoings, (except only the salary of the assistant curate where such a curate is necessary,) which mortgage

And be it enacted, that all sums of money recovered or received, by suit or compositions, from the representatives of any former incumbent of such benefice, and not laid out in the repairs of such buildings, shall go and be applied in part of the payments under such estimate as aforesaid; and that all money thereafter to be recovered or received, in case the same cannot be had before such buildings are completed, and the money paid for the same, shall be applied as soon as received in payment of the principal then due, as far as the same will extend; or in case the said mortgage money shall have been discharged, all such money arising from dilapidations shall be paid into the hands of the nominee to be appointed as aforesaid, or of some other person or persons to be nominated by the bishop, in case such nominee shall be dead or shall decline to act therein, to be laid out and expended in making some additional buildings or improvements upon the glebe of such benefice, to be approved by the bishop; and in the meantime, or in case such buildings shall not be necessary, then in trust to lay out the same in government or other good securities, and pay the interest thereof to the incumbent for the time being.

"LXX. And be it further enacted, that where new buildings are necessary to be provided for the residence of the incumbent of any benefice exceeding in value one hundred pounds a year, and avoided after the passing of this act, and where such new buildings cannot be conveniently erected on the glebe of such benefice, it shall be lawful for the bishop to contract, or to authorize, if he shall think fit, the person so to be nominated by him as aforesaid to contract, for the absolute purchase of any house or buildings in a situation convenient for the residence of the incumbent of such benefice, and also to contract for any land adjoining or lying convenient to such house or building, or to contract for any land upon which a fit house of residence can be conveniently built, and to raise the purchase money for such house or buildings and land adjoining, or for such land upon which a house of residence can be conveniently built, (as the case may be,) by mortgage of the glebe, tithes, rents, and other profits and emoluments arising or to arise from such benefice, in the same manner in all respects as is hereinbefore directed with respect to the mortgage hereinbefore authorized or directed to be made, which mortgage shall be binding upon the incumbent and his successors, and he and they and their representatives are hereby made liable to the payment of the principal, interest, and costs, in the same manner and to the same extent as hereinbefore directed with respect to the aforesaid mortgage; and the receipt of such nominee or nominees as aforesaid shall be a sufficient discharge to the person or persons who shall advance or pay the money so to be raised; provided always, that no greater sum shall be charged on any benefice under the authority of this act than four years net income and produce of such benefice (after such deduction as aforesaid).

And be it enacted, that the buildings and lands so to be purchased shall be conveyed to the patron of such benefice and his heirs or successors, as the case may be, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the incumbent of such benefice for the time being and his successors, and shall be annexed to such benefice, and be enjoyed and go in succession with the same for ever; but no contract of purchase made by the nominee shall be valid until confirmed by the bishop by writing under his hand; and every such purchase deed shall be in the form or to the effect contained in the schedule hereunto annexed, and shall be registered in such manner and in such office as the other deeds are hereby directed to be registered.

"LXXII. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the governors authorized or appointed to regulate and superintend the bounty given by her majesty Queen Anne for the augmentation of the maintenance of the poor clergy, to advance and lend out of the money which has arisen or shall from time to time arise from that bounty, for promoting and assisting the purposes of this act, any sum not exceeding the amount hereby authorized to be raised upon such mortgage and security as aforesaid, and subject to the several regulations of this act, and to receive interest for the same not exceeding four pounds for one hundred pounds by the year.

"LXXIII. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any college or hall surety, in double the sum so to be borrowed or raised, with condition for his duly applying and accounting for the same according to the directions of this act; and the receipt of the person or persons so to be nominated shall be a sufficient discharge to the person or persons who shall advance and pay the money; and the person or persons so to be nominated shall enter into contracts with proper persons for such buildings or repairs as shall be approved by the said bishop, and shall be specified in an instrument written upon parchment and signed by him, and shall inspect and have the care of the execution of such contracts, and shall pay the money for such buildings and repairs, according to the terms of such agreements, and also the expenses of preparing the mortgage deed and incident thereto, and of making such certificate, plan, and estimate, and copies thereof as aforesaid, and shall take proper receipts and vouchers for the same; and as soon as such buildings or repairs shall be completed, and the money paid, shall make out an account of his receipts and payments, together with the vouchers for the same, and enter them in a book fairly written, which shall be signed by him, and laid before the bishop of the diocese and examined by him, and when allowed by writing under his hand, such allowance shall be a full discharge to the person so nominated in respect to the said accounts; and if any balance shall remain in the hands of such nominee or nominees, the same shall be laid out in some farther lasting improvements in building upon such glebe, or shall be paid and applied in discharge of so much of the said principal debt as such balance will extend to pay, at the discretion of the said bishop, by order signed by him; and an account shall also be kept, made out, and allowed of such further disbursements in manner aforesaid; all which accounts when made out, completed, and allowed, shall be deposited with the vouchers in the hands of the said registrar, and kept by him for the use and benefit of the incumbents of such benefice for the time being, who shall have a right to inspect the same whenever occasion shall require, paying to such registrar or deputy registrar the sum of one shilling for every such inspection.

And be it enacted, that the incumbent of every such benefice, in cases where such mortgage or mortgages shall be made as aforesaid, and his successors for the time being, shall, from and after the expiration of the first year of the said term, (in which year no part of the principal sum borrowed shall be repayable,) yearly and every year (each year to be computed from the date of such mortgage) pay to the mortgagee one thirtieth part of the principal sum until the whole thereof shall be repaid, and shall at the end of the first and each succeeding year pay the yearly interest on the principal sum, or so much thereof as shall from time to time remain unpaid; and that every such incumbent shall annually, at his own expense, from the time such buildings authorised to be made by this act shall be completed, insure, at one of the public offices established in London or Westminster for insurance of houses and buildings, the house and other buildings upon such glebe against accidents by fire, at such sum of money as shall be determined upon by the bishop; and in default of the payment of either the principal or interest in manner aforesaid, or neglect of the incumbent to make such insurance, the bishop shall have power to sequester the profits of the benefice till such payment or insurance shall be made.

“LXVIII. And be it enacted, that the sum payable at the end of any year in which there shall be an avoidance of such benefice shall be apportioned between the successor and the incumbent avoiding such benefice by death or otherwise, or his representatives, in such proportions as the profits of such living shall have been received by them respectively for the year in which such death or avoidance shall happen; and that in case any difference shall arise in adjusting or settling the proportions aforesaid, the same shall be determined by two indifferent persons, the one to be named by the said successor, and the other by the person making such avoidance, or his representatives in case of his death; and in case such nominees shall not be appointed within the space of two calendar months next after such death or avoidance, or if they cannot agree in adjusting such proportions within the space of one calendar month after they shall have been appointed, the same shall be determined by some neighbouring clergyman, to be nominated by the bishop, whose determination shall be final and conclusive between the parties.

“LXXVII. And be it enacted, that whenever the bishop shall see reason to believe that the ecclesiastical duties of any benefice are inadequately performed, it shall be lawful for him to issue a commission to four beneficed clergymen of his diocese, or if the benefice be within his peculiar jurisdiction but locally situate in another diocese then to four beneficed clergymen of such last-mentioned diocese, one whereof shall be the rural dean, if any, of the rural deanery or district wherein such benefice is situated, directing them to inquire into the facts of the case; and it shall be lawful for the incumbent of the said benefice to add to such commissioners one other incumbent of a benefice within the same diocese; and if the said commissioners or the major part of them report in writing under their hands to the said bishop that in their opinion the duties of such benefice are inadequately performed, it shall be lawful for such bishop, if he shall see fit, by writing under his hand, to require the spiritual person holding such benefice, though he may actually reside or be engaged in performing the duties thereof, to nominate to him a fit person or persons, with sufficient stipend or stipends, to be licensed by him to perform or to assist in performing such duties, specifying therein the grounds of such requisition; and if such spiritual person shall neglect or omit to make such nomination for the space of three months after such requisition so made as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the bishop to appoint and license a curate or curates, as the case shall appear to him to require, with such stipend or stipends as he shall think fit to appoint, not exceeding the respective stipends allowed to curates by this act in the case of non-resident incumbents, nor, except in the case of negligence, exceeding one half of the net annual value of such benefice; and such bishop shall cause a copy of every such requisition, and the evidence to found the same, to be forthwith filed in the registry of his court; provided always, that it shall be lawful for any such spiritual person within one month after the service upon him of such requisition to nominate a curate, or of notice of any such appointment and licence of such curate or curates, to appeal to the archbishop of the province, who shall approve or revoke such requisition, or confirm or annul such appointment, as to him may seem just and proper.

And be it enacted, that whenever the annual value of any benefice, the incumbent whereof was not in possession at the time of the passing of this act, shall exceed five hundred pounds, and the population thereof shall amount to three thousand persons, or though the population do not amount to three thousand persons, if there be in the said benefice a second church or chapel situated not less than two miles from the mother church, and with a hamlet or district connected with it containing four hundred persons, it shall be lawful for the bishop, if he shall see fit, to require the spiritual person holding such benefice, although he shall be resident thereon or engaged in performing the duties thereof, to nominate a fit and proper person to be licensed as a curate to assist in performing the duties of such benefice, and to be paid by the person holding the same; and if a fit person shall not be nominated to the bishop within three months after his requisition for that purpose shall have been delivered to the incumbent, or left at his last or usual place of abode, it shall be lawful for the bishop to appoint and license a curate, and shall think fit to appoint, not exceeding the respective stipends allowed to curates by this act, nor in any case exceeding one fifth part of the net annual value of such benefice; provided always, that such spiritual person or service upon him of such requisition to nominate a curate, or of notice of any such appointment of a curate, appeal to the archbishop of the province, who shall approve or revoke such requisition, or confirm or annul such appointment, as to him may appear just and proper.

And be it enacted, that in case of a stipend being assigned by the provisions of this act, to the curate of any benefice, the “LXXIV. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said bishop, by writing under his hand, to make such allowance to the person or persons to be nominated by him for the purpose of paying and applying the money so to be raised as aforesaid as he shall think fit, not exceeding the sum of five pounds for every one hundred pounds so to be laid out and expended as aforesaid.

“LXXV. And be it enacted, that if any spiritual person holding any benefice, who shall not actually reside thereon nine months in each year, (unless such person shall, with the consent of the bishop, from time to time, signified in writing under his hand and revocable at any time, perform the ecclesiastical duties of the same, he either being resident on another benefice, of which he shall also be the incumbent, or having a legal exemption from residence on his benefice, or having a licence to reside out of the same, or to reside out of the usual house of residence belonging to the same,) shall for a period exceeding three months altogether, or to be accounted at several times, in the course of any one year absent himself from his benefice, without leaving a curate or curates duly licensed or approved by the bishop to perform such ecclesiastical duties, or shall, for a period of one month after the death, resignation, or removal of any curate who shall have served his church or chapel, neglect to notify such death, resignation, or removal to the bishop, or shall for the period of four months after the death, resignation, or removal of such curate neglect to nominate to the bishop a proper curate(1), in every such case the bishop is hereby authorized to appoint and license a proper curate, with such salary as is by this act allowed and directed, to serve the church or chapel of the benefice in respect of which such neglect or default shall have occurred; provided always, that such licence shall in every case specify whether the curate is required to reside within the parish or place, or not; and if the curate is permitted by the bishop to reside out of the parish or place, the grounds upon which the curate is so permitted to reside out of the same shall be specified in such licence; and the distance of the residence of any curate from any such church or chapel which he shall be licensed to serve shall not exceed three statute miles, except in cases of necessity, to be approved by the bishop, and specified in the licence.

“LXXVI. And be it enacted, that in every case where a curate is appointed to serve in any benefice upon which the incumbent either does not reside or has not satisfied the bishop of his full purpose to reside during four months in the year, such curate shall be required by the bishop to reside within the parish or place in Allowance to person nominated by the bishop to pay and apply money.

Non-resident incumbents neglecting to appoint curates, the bishop to appoint.

Curate to reside on benefices, under certain circumstances.

(1) Nominate to the bishop a proper curate.—It seems, that an ecclesiastical custom, which is not immemorial, will not, though acted upon for a long time, deprive a rector of his common law right to appoint his curate. Arnold (Clerk) v. Bath & Wells (Bishop of), 5 Bing. 316.

In Capel v. Child, (2 C. & J. 558,) the Bishop of London issued a requisition, under Stat. 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 50, [now repealed] requiring the vicar of Watford to nominate a curate with a stipend; on the ground, that it appeared to the bishop, of his own knowledge, that the ecclesiastical duties of the vicarage and parish church of Watford were inadequately performed, by reason of the vicar's negligence. The vicar appointed no curate, and did not appeal to the archbishop. The bishop, after three months, licensed the Rev. Arthur Hubbard, clerk, as curate of Watford, with a stipend. The vicar refused to allow the Rev. Arthur Hubbard to officiate; upon which the bishop issued a mandate or summons to shew cause, why the vicar should not pay the stipend due, and ultimately proceeded to sequestration: it was held, that the requisition upon which the whole of the proceedings were founded, was in the nature of a judgment; and void, as the party had had no opportunity of being heard.

That such a requisition ought to state particular instances of negligence, or shew how the incumbent was negligent.

And, that Stat. 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 50, did not apply to the case of a benefice with only one church and no chapel.

“LXXXV. And be it enacted, that in every case in which any spiritual person shall have been, since the twentieth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and thirteen, or shall hereafter be instituted, inducted, nominated, or appointed to, or otherwise become incumbent of any benefice, and shall not duly reside thereon, the bishop shall appoint for the curate licensed under the provisions of this act to serve such benefice such stipend as is hereinafter next mentioned; (that is to say,) such stipend shall in no case be less than eighty pounds per annum, or than the annual value of the benefice, if such value shall not amount to eighty pounds; nor less than one hundred pounds per annum, or than the whole value, if such value shall not amount to one hundred pounds, in any parish or place where the population shall amount to three hundred persons; nor less than one hundred and twenty pounds per annum, or than the whole value, if such value shall not amount to one hundred and twenty pounds, in any parish or place where the population shall amount to five hundred persons; nor less than one hundred and thirty-five pounds per annum, or than the whole value, if such value shall not amount to one hundred and thirty-five pounds, in any parish or place where the population shall amount to seven hundred and fifty persons; nor less than one hundred and fifty pounds per annum, or than the whole value, if such value shall not amount to one hundred and fifty pounds, in any parish or place where the population shall amount to one thousand persons.

“LXXXVI. And be it enacted, that where the annual value of any such benefice shall exceed four hundred pounds, it shall be lawful for the bishop to assign to the curate, being resident within the same, and serving no other cure, a stipend of one hundred pounds, notwithstanding the population may not amount to three hundred persons; and that where the annual value of any such benefice shall exceed four hundred pounds, and the population shall amount to five hundred persons, it shall be lawful for the bishop to assign to the curate, being resident within the same, and serving no other cure, any larger stipend, so that the same shall not exceed by more than fifty pounds per annum the amount of the stipend hereinbefore required to be assigned to any such curate; and that where the population of any such benefice shall exceed two thousand persons, it shall be lawful for the bishop to require the incumbent thereof to nominate to him two persons to be licensed as curates; and if such spiritual person shall neglect or omit to make such nomination for the space of three months after such requisition so made as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the bishop to appoint and license two curates or a second curate, and in all and every of such cases to assign to each curate as nominated or appointed such stipend as he shall think fit, not exceeding together the highest rate of stipend allowed by this act in the case of one such curate, except in cases where the incumbent shall consent to a larger stipend: provided always, that such incumbent may within one month after service upon him of such requisition, or of notice of any such appointment of two curates or a second curate, appeal to the archbishop of the province, who shall approve or revoke such requisition or confirm or annul such appointment, as to him may appear just and proper.

“LXXXVII. And be it enacted, that in every case in which the bishop shall be satisfied that any spiritual person holding any benefice within his diocese is non-resident, or has become incapable of performing the duties thereof from age, sickness, or other unavoidable cause, and that, from these or from any other special and peculiar circumstances, great hardship or inconvenience would arise if the full stipend specified in this act should be allowed to the curate of such benefice, it shall be lawful for such bishop, with the consent of the archbishop of the province, to be signified in writing under the hand of the said archbishop upon the licence to be granted to such curate, to assign to the curate such stipend less than the full amount in this act specified as shall appear to him just and reasonable: provided incumbent whereof shall have been duly found a lunatic or person of unsound mind, the committee of the estate of any such lunatic or person of unsound mind shall pay such stipend to such curate out of the profits of the benefice which shall come to his hands.

“LXXX. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the bishop, in his discretion, to order that there shall be two full services, each of such services, if the bishop shall so direct, to include a sermon or lecture on every Sunday throughout the year, or any part thereof, in the church or chapel of every or any benefice within his diocese, whatever may be the annual value or the population thereof; and also in the church or chapel of every parish or chapelry, where a benefice is composed of two or more parishes or chapelries, in which there shall be a church or chapel, if the annual value of the benefice arising from that parish or chapelry shall amount to one hundred and fifty pounds, and the population of that parish or chapelry shall amount to four hundred persons; provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be taken to repeal or affect the provisions of an act passed in the fifty-eighth year of the reign of his majesty King George the Third, intituled, ‘An Act for building and promoting the building of additional Churches in populous Parishes,’ by which the bishop of any diocese is empowered to direct the performance of a third or additional service in the several churches or chapels within his diocese under the circumstances therein mentioned.

“LXXXI. And be it enacted, that every bishop to whom any application shall be made for any licence for a curate to serve for any person not duly residing upon his benefice shall, before he shall grant such licence, require a statement of all the particulars by this act required to be stated by any person applying for a licence for non-residence; and in every case in which application shall be made to any bishop for a licence for any stipendiary curate to serve in any benefice, whether the incumbent be resident or non-resident, such bishop shall also require a declaration in writing to be made and subscribed by the incumbent and the curate, to the purport and effect that the one bonâ fide intends to pay, and the other bonâ fide intends to receive, the whole actual stipend mentioned in such statement, without any abatement in respect of rent or consideration for the use of the glebe house, and without any other deduction or reservation whatever.

“LXXXII. And be it enacted, that every curate obtaining such licence as aforesaid shall pay to the secretary or other proper officer of the bishop for the same the sum of ten shillings, over and above any stamp duty which may be chargeable thereon, which sum of ten shillings shall be in lieu of all fees heretofore demandable by such secretary or officer for such licence, or for any certificate connected therewith; and that whenever any person shall be licensed to two curacies within the same diocese at the same time, it shall be sufficient for such person to sign a declaration appointed to be signed by an act, intituled, ‘An Act of Uniformity,’ once only; and it shall be sufficient for such person to produce one certificate only of his having so signed such declaration.

“LXXXIII. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the bishop of the diocese, and he is hereby required, subject to the several provisions and restrictions in this act contained, to appoint to every curate of a non-resident incumbent such stipend as is specified in this act; and every licence to be granted to a stipendiary curate, whether the incumbent of the benefice be resident or non-resident thereon, shall specify the amount of the stipend to be paid to the curate; and in case any difference shall arise between the incumbent of any benefice and his curate touching such stipend, or the payment thereof or of the arrears thereof, the bishop, on complaint to him made, may and shall summarily hear and determine the same, without appeal; and in case of wilful neglect or refusal to pay such stipend, or the arrears thereof, he is hereby empowered to enforce payment of such stipend, or the arrears thereof, by monition, and by sequestration of the profits of such benefice.

“LXXXIV. And be it enacted, that it shall not be lawful for the bishop to appoint for the curate of any benefice, to which the spiritual person holding the same was instituted, licensed, or otherwise admitted before the twentieth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and thirteen, any stipend exceeding seventy-five “LXXXV. And be it enacted, that in every case in which any spiritual person shall have been, since the twentieth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and thirteen, or shall hereafter be instituted, inducted, nominated, or appointed to, or otherwise become incumbent of any benefice, and shall not duly reside thereon, the bishop shall appoint for the curate licensed under the provisions of this act to serve such benefice such stipend as is hereinafter next mentioned; (that is to say,) such stipend shall in no case be less than eighty pounds per annum, or than the annual value of the benefice, if such value shall not amount to eighty pounds; nor less than one hundred pounds per annum, or than the whole value, if such value shall not amount to one hundred pounds, in any parish or place where the population shall amount to three hundred persons; nor less than one hundred and twenty pounds per annum, or than the whole value, if such value shall not amount to one hundred and twenty pounds, in any parish or place where the population shall amount to five hundred persons; nor less than one hundred and thirty-five pounds per annum, or than the whole value, if such value shall not amount to one hundred and thirty-five pounds, in any parish or place where the population shall amount to seven hundred and fifty persons; nor less than one hundred and fifty pounds per annum, or than the whole value, if such value shall not amount to one hundred and fifty pounds, in any parish or place where the population shall amount to one thousand persons.

“LXXXVI. And be it enacted, that where the annual value of any such benefice shall exceed four hundred pounds, it shall be lawful for the bishop to assign to the curate, being resident within the same, and serving no other cure, a stipend of one hundred pounds, notwithstanding the population may not amount to three hundred persons; and that where the annual value of any such benefice shall exceed four hundred pounds, and the population shall amount to five hundred persons, it shall be lawful for the bishop to assign to the curate, being resident within the same, and serving no other cure, any larger stipend, so that the same shall not exceed by more than fifty pounds per annum the amount of the stipend hereinbefore required to be assigned to any such curate; and that where the population of any such benefice shall exceed two thousand persons, it shall be lawful for the bishop to require the incumbent thereof to nominate to him two persons to be licensed as curates; and if such spiritual person shall neglect or omit to make such nomination for the space of three months after such requisition so made as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the bishop to appoint and license two curates or a second curate, and in all and every of such cases to assign to each curate so nominated or appointed such stipend as he shall think fit, not exceeding together the highest rate of stipend allowed by this act in the case of one such curate, except in cases where the incumbent shall consent to a larger stipend: provided always, that such incumbent may within one month after service upon him of such requisition, or of notice of any such appointment of two curates or a second curate, appeal to the archbishop of the province, who shall approve or revoke such requisition or confirm or annul such appointment, as to him may appear just and proper.

“LXXXVII. And be it enacted, that in every case in which the bishop shall be satisfied that any spiritual person holding any benefice within his diocese is non-resident, or has become incapable of performing the duties thereof from age, sickness, or other unavoidable cause, and that, from these or from any other special and peculiar circumstances, great hardship or inconvenience would arise if the full stipend specified in this act should be allowed to the curate of such benefice, it shall be lawful for such bishop, with the consent of the archbishop of the province, to be signified in writing under the hand of the said archbishop upon the licence to be granted to such curate, to assign to the curate such stipend less than the full amount in this act specified as shall appear to him just and reasonable: provided always, that in the licence granted in every such case it shall be stated that for special reasons the bishop hath not thought proper to assign to the curate the full stipend required by this act: provided also, that such special reasons shall be entered fully in a separate book to be kept for that purpose, and to be deposited in the registry of the diocese, which book shall be open to inspection with the leave of the bishop, as in the cases of application for licences for non-residence.

“LXXXVIII. And be it enacted, that if any incumbent of two benefices, residing bond fide in different proportions of every year on one or other of such benefices the full period specified by this act, shall employ a curate to perform ecclesiastical duty interchangeably from time to time upon such of the benefices from which he shall be absent during his own actual residence upon the other thereof, it shall be lawful for the bishop to assign to such curate any stipend not exceeding such stipend as would be allowed under this act for the larger of such benefices, nor less than would be allowed for the smaller, as to the bishop shall under all the circumstances appear just and reasonable: provided always, that if any such incumbent shall employ a curate or curates for the whole year upon each of such benefices, such incumbent so residing bond fide as aforesaid, in such case it shall be lawful for the bishop to assign to either or each of such curates any such stipend less than the amount specified in this act as he shall think fit.

“LXXXIX. And be it enacted, that in every case where the bishop shall find it necessary or expedient for obtaining the proper performance of ecclesiastical duties to license any spiritual person holding any benefice to serve as curate of any adjoining or other parish or place, it shall be lawful for such bishop, if he shall think fit, to assign to such person so licensed a stipend less by a sum not exceeding thirty pounds per annum than the stipend which in the several cases in this act specified the bishop is required to assign; and in every case where the bishop shall find it necessary or expedient to license the same person to serve as curate for two parishes or places, it shall be lawful for such bishop, if he shall think fit, to direct that during such time as such curate shall serve the churches or chapels of such two parishes or places the stipend to be received by him for serving each of the said churches or chapels shall be less by a sum not exceeding thirty pounds per annum than the stipend which in the several cases hereinbefore specified the bishop is required by this act to assign.

“XC. And be it enacted, that all agreements made or to be made between persons holding benefices and their curates, in fraud or derogation of the provisions of this act, and all agreements whereby any curate shall undertake or in any manner bind himself to accept or be content with any stipend less than that which shall be assigned by his licence, shall be void to all intents and purposes, and shall not be pleaded or given in evidence in any court of law or equity; and, notwithstanding the payment and acceptance, in pursuance of any such agreement, of any sum less than that assigned by the licence, or any receipt, discharge, or acquittance that may be given for the same, the curate and his personal representatives shall be and remain entitled to the full amount of the stipend assigned by his licence; and the payment of so much thereof as shall be proved to the satisfaction of the bishop to remain unpaid shall, together with full costs of recovering the same as between proctor and client, be enforced by monition, and by sequestration of the profits of the benefice, to be issued by the bishop for that purpose on application made by the curate or his representatives; provided that such application shall in every such case be made to the bishop within twelve months after such curate shall have quitted his curacy, or have died.

“XCI. And be it enacted, that in every case in which the bishop shall assign to any curate a stipend equal to the whole annual value of the benefice in which he is licensed to serve, such stipend shall be subject to deduction in respect to all such charges and outgoings as may legally affect the value of such benefice, and to any loss or diminution which may lessen such value, without the wilful default or neglect of the spiritual person holding the benefice.

“XCII. And be it enacted, that in every such case as last aforesaid, it shall be

And be it enacted, that every bishop who shall grant or revoke any licence to any curate under this act shall cause a copy of such licence or revocation to be entered in the registry of the diocese; and an alphabetical list of such licences and revocations shall be made out by the registrar of each diocese, and entered in a book, and kept for the inspection of all persons, upon payment of three shillings, and no more; and a copy of every such licence and revocation shall be transmitted by the said registrar to the churchwardens or chapelwardens of the parish, township, or place to which the same relates, within one month after the grant of such licence or revocation thereof, to be by them deposited in the parish chest: provided always, that every such registrar shall for every such copy transmitted to such churchwardens or chapelwardens as aforesaid be entitled to demand and receive from the incumbent of such benefice a fee of three shillings, and no more: provided also, that in case the archbishop shall, on appeal to him, annul the revocation of any such licence, the bishop by whom such revocation shall have been made shall, immediately on receiving notice from the archbishop that he had annulled the same, make such or the like order as is hereinbefore directed to be made on the revocation of a licence for non-residence being annulled, which order shall be binding on the registrar and churchwardens respectively to whom the same shall be addressed.

“XCVI. And be it enacted, that every curate who shall reside in the house of residence of any benefice which shall become vacant shall peaceably deliver up possession thereof, with the appurtenances, upon having six weeks notice from the spiritual person admitted, collated, instituted, or licensed to such benefice, provided such notice be given within six months from the time of such admission, collation, institution, or licence; and that in all other cases it shall be lawful for the incumbent of any benefice, with the permission signified in writing under the hand of the bishop of the diocese, or for such bishop, at any time, upon six months notice in writing, to direct any curate to deliver up the house of residence, and the offices, stables, gardens, and appurtenances thereto belonging, and such portion of the glebe land as shall have been assigned to such curate, and such curate shall thereupon peaceably deliver up the possession of the premises pursuant to such notice: and if any curate shall refuse to deliver up such premises in any or either of the cases aforesaid he shall pay to the spiritual person holding the benefice the sum of forty shillings for every day of wrongful possession after the service of such notice.

“XCVII. And be it enacted, that no curate shall quit any curacy to which he shall be licensed until after three months notice of his intention given to the incumbent of the benefice and to the bishop, unless with the consent of the bishop, to be signified in writing under his hand, upon pain of paying to the incumbent a sum not exceeding the amount of his stipend for six months, at the discretion of the bishop, such sum to be specified in writing under the hand of the bishop, which sum may in such case be retained out of the stipend if the same or any part thereof shall remain unpaid, or, if the same cannot be retained out of the stipend, may be recovered by the spiritual person holding the benefice by action of debt.

“XCVIII. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the bishop to license any curate who is or shall be actually employed by any non-resident incumbent of any benefice within his diocese although no express nomination of such curate shall have been made to such bishop by the incumbent; and that the bishop shall have power, after having given to the curate sufficient opportunity of showing reason to the contrary, to revoke, summarily and without further process, any licence granted to any curate, and to remove such curate, for any cause which shall appear to such bishop to be good and reasonable: provided always, that any such curate may, within one month after service upon him of such revocation, appeal to the archbishop of the province, who shall confirm or annul such revocation as to him shall appear just and proper.

“XCIX. And be it enacted, that in every case in which a benefice shall be under sequestration, except for the purpose of providing a house of residence as aforesaid, it shall be lawful to the bishop and he is hereby required, if the incumbent shall not perform the duties of the said benefice, to appoint and license a curate or curates thereto, and to assign to him or them a stipend or stipends, not exceeding, in the case of any one such curate, the highest rate of stipend allowed by this act, nor where more than one curate is appointed, a stipend exceeding one hundred pounds to more than one such curate, such stipend or stipends to be paid by the sequestrator of such benefice out of the profits thereof: provided always, that not more than one curate shall be appointed to any such benefice in any case in which there is not more than one church, or the population does not exceed two thousand persons.

“C. And be it enacted, that upon the avoidance of any benefice, by death, resignation, or otherwise, the sequestrator appointed by the bishop shall, out of the profits thereof which shall come to his hands, pay to the curate or curates appointed by such bishop to perform the ecclesiastical duties of such benefice during the vacancy thereof, such stipend or stipends as shall be ordered to be paid to him or them by such bishop, not exceeding the respective stipends allowed by this act, and in proportion only to the time of such vacancy.

"CXI. And be it enacted, that all appeals under the provisions of this act to any archbishop shall be in writing signed by the party appealing; and that in order to discourage frivolous appeals no proceeding shall be had in any such appeal until the appellant shall, if required, have given security in such form and to such amount as the archbishop shall direct of payment to the bishop of such costs as shall be awarded by the archbishop if he shall decide against the appellant; and that after such security, if required, shall have been given, the said archbishop shall forthwith, either by himself or by some commissioner or commissioners appointed under his hand from among the other bishops of his province, make or cause to be made inquiry into the matter complained of, and shall after such inquiry, and in the latter case after a report in writing from his said commissioner or commissioners, give his decision in such appeal in writing under his hand; and when he shall decide the merits of the appeal against the appellant he shall also award and direct whether any and what amount of costs shall be paid by the appellant to the bishop respondent; and in like manner when he shall decide in favour of the appellant he shall also award and direct whether any and what amount of costs shall be paid by the bishop respondent to the appellant.

"CXII. And be it enacted, that in all cases in which proceedings under the act are directed to be by monition and sequestration, such monition shall issue under the hand and seal of the bishop, and such monition, and any other instrunot plead to the jurisdiction unless the declaration shew, that the cause of action accrued within a county palatine, and that, even then, the plea must aver either that the defendant dwells in the county, or that he had sufficient goods and chattels there by which he may be attached, otherwise the plea cannot be allowed, lest a failure of justice should ensue. I do not say whether that is too generally laid down or not. A similar doctrine is afterwards stated as to the claim of consueance (p. 632). Now, in the present case, the plea could not give any other jurisdiction in which the plaintiff could have a remedy; for, by the statute, no action at law lies any where. The defendant could not give the plaintiff a better writ. The only difficulty I felt as to the effect of sect. 74 arose from the words in sect. 53, that the bishop's licence 'shall be evidence of the amount of the salary so appointed to any curate in all courts of law or equity;' which seems to imply, that such a question might come before one of those courts. But that expression is not sufficient to take away the effect of sect. 74, if the facts bring the case within it. Then as to the averments in the plea. The non-residence is stated, merely to shew the authority of the bishop to appoint a salary. It is then alleged, that differences and disputes arose, and are depending between the plaintiff and defendant, touching the stipend assigned in the licence, and the payment thereof, and of the arrears thereof, in the very words of sect. 53; clearly shewing the case to be one in which the bishop had jurisdiction: and then it is said that the action, so far as in the introductory part of the plea is mentioned, is brought touching and concerning the said stipend, and the payment and arrears thereof. There is, therefore, a pointed averment as to the bishop's jurisdiction over the subject-matter of this cause. Then it is said that the plea ought to shew, what the subjects of dispute were. But the effect of that statement would be directly to contravene the object of the legislature, and of the plea itself; inasmuch as, when the subjects of dispute were so placed on the record, they might be traversed, and so would be brought, at once, before another tribunal than that of the bishop, namely, a jury, or this court. A mere traverse of the fact, generally stated, that disputes had arisen, would not have that effect. At all events, the plea here follows the words of the act, and is sufficient." *West (Clerk) v. formed shall within the several dioceses of Saint Asaph, Bangor, Llandaff, and Saint David's, extend and apply to cases wherein the bishop shall see reason to believe that the ecclesiastical duties of any benefice are not satisfactorily performed by reason of the insufficient instruction in the Welsh language of the spiritual person serving such benefice.

"CVI. And be it enacted, that no spiritual person shall serve more than two benefices in one day unless in case of unforeseen and pressing emergency, in which case the spiritual person who shall so have served more than two benefices shall forthwith report the circumstance to the bishop of the diocese.

"CVII. And be it enacted, that all the powers, authorities, provisions, regulations, matters, and things in this act contained, in relation to bishops in their dioceses, shall extend and be construed to extend to the archbishops in the respective dioceses of which they are bishops, and also in their own peculiar jurisdictions, as fully and effectually as if the archbishops were named with the bishops in every such case.

"CVIII. And be it enacted, that every archbishop and bishop, within the limits of whose province or diocese respectively any benefice, exempt or peculiar, shall be locally situate, shall, except as herein otherwise provided, have, use, and exercise all the powers and authorities necessary for the due execution by them respectively of the provisions and purposes of this act, and for enforcing the same with regard thereto respectively, as such archbishop and bishop respectively would have used and exercised if the same were not exempt or peculiar, but were subject in all respects to the jurisdiction of such archbishop or bishop; and where any benefice, exempt or peculiar, shall be locally situate within the limits of more than one province or diocese, or where the same or any of them shall be locally situate between the limits of the two provinces, or between the limits of any two or more dioceses, the archbishop or bishop of the cathedral church to whose province or diocese the parish church of the same respectively shall be nearest in local situation shall have, use, and exercise all the powers and authorities which are necessary for the due execution of the provisions of this act, and enforcing the same, with regard thereto respectively, as such archbishop or bishop could have used if the same were not exempt or peculiar, but were subject in all respects to the jurisdiction of such archbishop or bishop respectively, and the same for all the purposes of this act shall be deemed and taken to be within the limits of the province or diocese of such archbishop or bishop; provided that the peculiars belonging to any archbishopric or bishopric, though locally situate in another diocese, shall continue subject to the archbishop or bishop to whom they belong, as well for the purposes of this act as for all other purposes of ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

"CIX. And be it enacted, that in every case in which jurisdiction is given to the bishop of the diocese or to any archbishop, under the provisions of this act, and for the purposes thereof, and the enforcing the due execution of the provisions thereof, all other and concurrent jurisdiction in respect thereof shall, except as herein otherwise provided, wholly cease(1), and no other jurisdiction in relation

(1) Concurrent jurisdiction . . . shall . . . wholly cease.—It was holden under Stat. 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 74, (of which Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 109, is a re-enactment,) that the common law courts were entirely ousted of jurisdiction, in disputes touching any stipend appointed by the bishop to a curate, under that act, or the payment or arrears of such salary.

Therefore, in assumpsit by a curate against a rector for such stipend, a plea founded on Stat. 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, was considered to have been properly pleaded in bar, and not in abatement.

That a special plea, founded on that statute, was sufficient, if it alleged, that disputes had arisen and were depending, touching the stipend, and the payment thereof, and of the arrears thereof, and that the action was brought concerning the stipend and the payment thereof, and of the arrears thereof, touching which the disputes had arisen, within the meaning of the statute, not further specifying the subjects of dispute:—Mr. Justice Patteson observing, "Section 74 of Stat. 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, is quite general in its enactment, directing that, in every case in which jurisdiction is given to the bishop for enforcing the due execution of the act, all other jurisdiction in respect thereof shall cease. If, therefore, it be shewn sufficiently by the plea, that the bishop has jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of this court is taken away. Then it is said that the plea here should have been in abatement. In 1 Tidd's Practice, (631, 9th ed.) it is laid down, that in transitory actions the defendant canto the provisions of this act shall be used, exercised, or enforced, save and except such jurisdiction of the bishop and archbishop under this act; anything in any act or acts of parliament, or law or laws, or usage or custom, to the contrary notwithstanding.

"CX. And be it enacted, that every sequestration issued under the provisions of this act shall have priority, and the sums to be thereby recovered shall be paid and satisfied in preference to all other sequestrations, and the sums to be thereby recovered, except such sequestrations as shall be founded on judgments duly docketed before the passing of this act, and also except such sequestrations as shall have been issued before any sequestration under this act under the provisions of an act passed in the seventeenth year of the reign of King George the Third, for promoting the residence of the parochial clergy, and the monies to be recovered by such excepted sequestrations respectively.

"CXI. And be it enacted, that all appeals under the provisions of this act to any archbishop shall be in writing signed by the party appealing; and that in order to discourage frivolous appeals no proceeding shall be had in any such appeal until the appellant shall, if required, have given security in such form and to such amount as the archbishop shall direct of payment to the bishop of such costs as shall be awarded by the archbishop if he shall decide against the appellant; and that after such security, if required, shall have been given, the said archbishop shall forthwith, either by himself or by some commissioner or commissioners appointed under his hand from among the other bishops of his province, make or cause to be made inquiry into the matter complained of, and shall after such inquiry, and in the latter case after a report in writing from his said commissioner or commissioners, give his decision in such appeal in writing under his hand; and when he shall decide the merits of the appeal against the appellant he shall also award and direct whether any and what amount of costs shall be paid by the appellant to the bishop respondent; and in like manner when he shall decide in favour of the appellant he shall also award and direct whether any and what amount of costs shall be paid by the bishop respondent to the appellant.

“CXIII. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in any case of non-residence in which a monition shall have been served upon any spiritual person under the provisions of this act, requiring such spiritual person to reside on his benefice, no sequestration shall issue until an order requiring such spiritual person to proceed and reside upon such benefice within thirty days, as hereinbefore enacted, shall have been served upon him in the same manner as is hereinbefore directed as to the service of monitions.

Sequestration not to issue after monition to reside, until service of order.

“CXIV. And be it enacted, that all penalties and forfeitures which shall be incurred under this act by any spiritual person holding a benefice shall and may be sued for and recovered in the court of the bishop of the diocese in which such benefice is situate, and by some person duly authorized for that purpose by such bishop by writing under his hand and seal, and in no other court, and by or at the instance of no other person whatever; and that the payment of every such penalty or forfeiture, together with the reasonable expense incurred in recovering the same, shall and may be enforced by monition and sequestration; and that it shall and may be lawful for such bishop, by any order made for that purpose in writing under his hand, and to be registered in the registry of the diocese, which the registrar is hereby required to do, to direct that every such penalty or forfeiture so recovered as aforesaid, and which shall not have been remitted in whole or in part, or so much thereof as shall not have been remitted, shall be applied towards the augmentation or improvement of such benefice or of the house of residence thereof, or of any of the buildings or appurtenances thereof.

sions of the said act shall be free, or whether the same or any part thereof shall be let at such low rents as such bishop may from time to time direct; anything in the said last-mentioned act or this act contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

“I. And be it further enacted, that where notices by the said last-recited act are required to be sent to or served upon the patron and incumbent a notice to the patron alone shall be sufficient in those cases where, at the time such notices are required to be sent or served as aforesaid, there shall be no incumbent of the parish in which such church or chapel is built or proposed to be built and endowed under such last-recited act or this act, and where such parish shall have remained without an incumbent for the space of twelve months.

“IV. And be it further enacted, that in those cases where by the said last-mentioned act her majesty's commissioners for building new churches are empowered, if they shall see fit, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, to declare the right of nominating a minister to such church or chapel, built or intended to be built and endowed to the satisfaction of the said commissioners in the manner in the said last-mentioned act specified, it shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners to accept, by way of endowment for such church or chapel, such sum as they may consider satisfactory, whether the same be secured on land or on money charged on land or vested in the funds, or on houses, tenements, or other hereditaments, or any or either of the said securities, whether wholly or jointly; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, if they shall think fit, in any or either of such modes of endowment, to declare, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, the right of nominating a minister as aforesaid, in like manner as they are empowered to do under the said last-mentioned act, when the other conditions therein mentioned shall have been complied with.

“V. And be it further enacted, that the powers granted by the said last-mentioned act to the said commissioners with respect to the granting the right of nomination as aforesaid, and the provisions of such act and of this act relating thereto, shall extend to cases where a building has been or shall be purchased by any person or persons, fit, in the opinion of the said commissioners, to be used, when consecrated, as a church or chapel for the performance of divine service as aforesaid.

To remove doubts as to the meaning and extent of the 23rd section of the Act 1 & 2 Gal. 4, c. 38.

"VII. And whereas it is by the said recited act passed in the first and second years of his late majesty King William the Fourth, amongst other things, enacted, that in certain parishes of large extent, where there exist chapels of ease at a considerable distance from the parish church, having chapelries, townships, or districts belonging or supposed to belong thereto, when any person or persons should be willing to endow any such chapel with such a provision secured upon land, money in the funds, tithes, or other hereditaments as should in the opinion of the bishop of the diocese be sufficient to ensure a competent stipend to the minister of such chapel, it should be lawful for the bishop, with certain consents therein mentioned, to declare that such chapel, when so endowed, should thenceforth be separate from and independent of the parish church, and that the chapel, township, or district belonging or supposed to belong thereto should be thenceforth a separate and distinct parish for all spiritual purposes; and that it should be lawful for the patron, with the consent of the incumbent, to make any agreement with the bishop of the diocese touching the future right of nomination to such chapel, such agreement to take effect in the manner therein mentioned; and whereas doubts may arise as to the extent and meaning of such provisions: be it therefore enacted, that such provisions shall extend to any churches or chapels, with chapelries, townships, or districts as aforesaid, whether the same were or shall be erected and consecrated before or after the passing of the said last-mentioned act.

Land, parcel of duchy of Cornwall, may be conveyed for purposes of recited acts.

"VIII. And whereas doubts are entertained whether since the duchy of Cornwall became vested in her majesty any lands, grounds, tenements, or hereditaments, parcel of the said duchy, can be granted, conveyed, or enfranchised under the provisions of the herein before-recited acts for the purposes thereof; be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for any three or more of the officers of the said duchy, who by virtue of their several offices are or shall be concerned in the general superintendence and management of the revenue and affairs of the said duchy, and duly authorized by her majesty and her successors during the time that the duchy of Cornwall is not held separately from the crown, by any deed or instrument under their hands and seals in the form prescribed by the said recited act of the third year of his late majesty King George the Fourth, or as near thereto as circumstances will permit, to grant, convey, or enfranchise lands, grounds, tenements, or hereditaments for any such purposes of the said recited acts, or any or either of them, as are in the said acts or any or either of them specified in relation to grants to be made by public departments under the said recited acts.

Extending powers, &c. given by 58 Geo. 3, c. 45, as to conveying lands.

"IX. And be it enacted, that all the powers and authorities given and conferred by the said act passed in the fifty-eighth year of his majesty King George the Third, intituled, 'An Act for the building and promoting the building of additional Churches in populous Parishes,' for enabling the bodies politic and persons therein mentioned to convey, and the commissioners to take, land for the sites of churches and chapels, shall extend to the transfer, by sale or exchange only, of land for a site for a house of residence of any incumbent, provided the same do not exceed five acres.

Commissioners may assign a district to churches and chapels in certain cases.

"X. And be it enacted, that in all cases where a church or chapel has been or shall be hereafter built by subscription, and endowed and subsequently augmented by a grant from Queen Anne's bounty, and where the patronage of such church or chapel shall have been acquired under any of the acts passed for regulating the distribution of such bounty, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, with the consent of the said bishop and the patron and incumbent of the parish, district parish, or district parish in which the said church or chapel may be, to assign a district to such church or chapel, and make the same a district parish, and that the patronage of such church or chapel shall not be affected thereby.

“XI. And be it further enacted, that after any instrument declaring the right of nomination to any church or chapel shall have been executed by her majesty’s said commissioners, or by the bishop of the diocese, as the case may require, under the provisions of the said last-mentioned act or this act, and the same shall have been registered in the registry of the diocese, it shall not be necessary, after three years from the time at which such instrument has been executed and registered as aforesaid, to prove that the facts stated in such instrument are correct, as to the amount of population or church accommodation in the parish or extra-parochial place in which the said church or chapel shall have been built, or as to the amount of population resident upwards of two miles from any existing church or chapel, and within one mile of the site on which such new church or chapel is erected, or as to the cost of building or purchasing and fitting up the same, or as to its endowment and repairing fund, or proportion of pews and free sittings, but such facts so stated in such instrument as aforesaid shall after such period as aforesaid be admitted in all courts as true and correct; and such instrument of nomination shall be after such period in all courts conclusive evidence that the declarations by the said last-mentioned act required to be made by the person or persons having built, building, or intending to build, or purchase and endow, a church or chapel, according to the provisions of the said last-mentioned act, have been duly made, and that the several other conditions, declarations, applications, notices, matters, and things required by the said last-mentioned act or this act to be respectively performed, made, given, and done previous to the declaration of the right of nomination as aforesaid being made and given by the aforesaid party or parties, and by the bishop of the diocese, or her majesty’s said commissioners, as the case may require, have been respectively duly complied with, performed, made, given, and done according to the provisions of the said recited act or this act; and further, that the patron or patrons of the mother church of such parish hath not or have not, within two calendar months after being served with such notice as by the said act is required, bound him, her, or themselves, by bond or other sufficient security, to her majesty’s said commissioners, or to the bishop of the diocese, as the case may require, that he, she, or they should, within two years thereafter, build or purchase, and completely finish and endow, an additional church or chapel in such parish, to the satisfaction of the bishop of the diocese, and that he, she, or they should also comply with and perform all and singular the conditions in the said act mentioned; and provided also, that nothing herein contained shall invalidate or be construed to invalidate any instruments declaring the right of nomination to a church or chapel, under the provisions of the said last-mentioned act, which have been executed by the bishop of any diocese, or by her majesty’s said commissioners, before the passing of this act, but that the same, and every matter and thing done in respect or in consequence thereof, in pursuance of the provisions of the said recited act, shall be as valid and effectual as if this act had not been passed: provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed as giving to any bishop, or to the said commissioners, any power or authority not given to him or them by the said last-mentioned act as to any church or chapel, respecting the right of nomination to which any proceeding at law or equity shall be depending at the time of passing this act.

“XII. And whereas by the said recited act passed in the fifty-eighth year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third it was enacted, that it should be lawful for his majesty in council, if he should judge fit, on a representation to be made to him by the said commissioners of the expediency of the same, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese and the patron, to direct, by an order in council, the division of any parish into two or more distinct and separate parishes, for all ecclesiastical purposes whatever: and whereas it was by the said last-recited act also enacted, that it should be lawful for his majesty in council, if he should judge fit, on a representation to be made to him by the said commissioners, with Licence of stipendiary curate of district chapelry not to be void by avoidance of parish church, unless revoked by the bishop.

The powers of the Act 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 45, extended, with respect to endowments to chapels of consolidated chapelries.

“XIII. And be it further enacted, that in all district churches and district chapelries the licence of the stipendiary curate appointed to serve the chapel of such chapelry shall not be rendered void by the avoidance of the church of the parish or district parish in which such chapel is situate, unless the same shall be revoked by the bishop of the diocese under his hand and seal; but such licence shall continue in force, unless otherwise directed as aforesaid by such bishop, notwithstanding the avoidance of the church of the parish or district parish, any statute, law, canon, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

“XIV. And whereas by an act passed in the first and second years of the reign of his late majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, ‘An Act to extend the Provisions of an Act passed in the twenty-ninth year of the Reign of His Majesty King Charles the Second, intituled, ‘An Act for confirming and perpetuating Augmentations made by Ecclesiastical Persons to small Vicarages and Curacies,’ and for other Purposes,’ it is amongst other things enacted, that it should be lawful for any rector or vicar for the time being of any rectory or vicarage, by a deed duly executed by him, to annex to any chapel of ease or parochial chapel, or to any district church or chapel, or any chapel having a district assigned thereto, whether then already built or thereafter to be built, (such chapel of ease or other chapel or church, with the district or place to which the same belongs, being situate within the limits or within the original limits of the said rectory or vicarage,) any part or parts of the tithes or other annual revenues belonging to such rectory or vicarage, or to grant to the incumbent for the time being of any such chapel of ease or other chapel or church, and his successors, any annual sum of money, and to charge the same on all or any part of such tithes or other revenues as aforesaid, or on any lands or other hereditaments belonging to the said rectory or vicarage; provided that every such grant and annexation should be made with the consent of the archbishop or bishop of the diocese within which the rectory or vicarage should be situate, or if the rectory or vicarage should be situate within a peculiar jurisdiction belonging to any archbishop or bishop, then with the consent of the archbishop or bishop to whom such peculiar jurisdiction should belong, and also with the consent of the patron or patrons of the said rectory or vicarage, such consents to be signified as in the said act is expressed: and whereas it is expedient that the powers of the last-recited act should be enlarged; be it therefore further enacted, that in all cases in which any contiguous parts of several parishes may have been or shall hereafter be united into a separate and distinct district for all ecclesiastical purposes, and such district shall have been or shall hereafter be duly constituted a consolidated chapelry, it shall be lawful for the rectors or vicars for the time being of the several parishes parts of which shall have been so united to have, use, and exercise respectively all the same powers and authorities for annexing to any such consolidated chapelry any part or parts of the tithes or other annual revenues belonging to their rectories or vicarages respectively, and for granting to the incumbent for the time being of any such consolidated chapelry and his successors any annual sum of money, to be payable by equal quarterly or equal half-yearly payments, and for charging the same on all or any part of such tithes or other revenues as aforesaid, or on any land or other hereditaments belonging to the said rectories or vicarages respectively, as are by the said last-recited act given to rectors and vicars for the augmentation of chapels of ease, and such other chapels and churches as are therein and herein before specified: provided always, that the exercise of such powers shall be subject to the like consents (to be signified in the same manner) as is required by the said act with regard to the exercise of the powers of the said act for the augmentation of chapels of ease, and the other chapels and churches therein specified; and in every case in which any such tithes or other revenues shall be annexed by virtue of this act to any consolidated chapelry, the incumbent for the time being thereof shall thenceforth have all the same remedies for recovering and enforcing payment of the premises which shall be so annexed as the rectors or vicars for the time being of the said rectories or vicarages respectively might have had if such annexation had not been made; and in every case in which any annual sum of money shall be granted by virtue of this act to the incumbent of a consolidated chapelry, such incumbent and his successors shall have all such remedies for recovery and enforcing payment thereof, by action of debt, against the incumbent of the rectory or vicarage by whom any such annual sum shall have been granted, or the incumbent thereof for the time being, or by distress upon the hereditaments to be charged therewith, or otherwise as shall in that behalf be specified and given by the deed by which the grant shall be made.

“XV. And be it further enacted, that the power of surrendering any right of patronage, presentation, or appointment to any benefice, donative, perpetual curacy, or of any spiritual person to any church or chapel, or any endowments or emoluments for the use of any church or chapel, or the incumbent thereof, and of making any agreement relative thereto with the said commissioners or the bishop of the diocese, which is given by the said recited act passed in the third year of the reign of his late majesty George the Fourth to bodies politic, corporate, or collegiate, corporations aggregate or sole, and to the persons and parties and for the purposes in the said act specified, shall extend to any surrender or agreement for such purposes, whether the same be made to or in favour of or entered into with or by any lay or spiritual person or persons, or corporation aggregate or sole; provided that such surrender or agreement be sanctioned by the said commissioners under their common seal, and by the bishop of the diocese under his hand and seal.

“XVI. And whereas it may be expedient in certain cases that a church or chapel should be constituted the parish church of the parish in which the same is situate, in the stead of the ancient parish church, and that such ancient parish church should thenceforth become a district church or chapel of ease in such parish; be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, with the consent in writing of the bishop of the diocese and of the patron of the said parish church, and with the consent also of the vestry or persons possessing the power of vestry, to order and direct, by instrument under their common seal, that any church or chapel in any parish shall become and be and remain the parish church of such parish, in the stead of the ancient parish church; and the therewith; and whereas four of the said annual instalments have accrued due, and the fifth of such instalments will fall due on the first day of November in this present year; and whereas only a small proportion of the said instalments so accrued due have been paid, and proceedings for the recovery of the same have been from time to time suspended by the authority of parliament, and it is expedient that payment of the said instalments shall be remitted, but only under certain circumstances, to be sworn by the parties liable to the payment of such instalments; and whereas by reason of the hereinbefore contained enactment extinguishing the right of all persons to compositions for tithes it is necessary to make special provision, saving the right to such instalments, and to the sums so added to the said compositions, and payable to the persons liable to such instalments; be it therefore enacted, that the several persons who would have been entitled to the receipt of the said composition for tithes if this act had not been passed shall be and remain liable to the queen's majesty for the repayment by instalments of the advances made under authority of the hereinbefore recited act of the third and fourth year of the reign of his late majesty, and that the said hereinbefore contained enactment extinguishing the right to compositions for tithes accrued or to accrue due shall not be taken to extend to the additions by the said act made to such compositions, but that the several sums directed by the said act to be added to and made payable, together with and in addition to the said compositions, shall be payable to and recoverable by the persons who would have been entitled to the said compositions by and from the persons who would have been liable to the payment of such compositions, if this act had not been passed, as if such sums had been by the said act made separately payable and recoverable as compositions for tithes; and that, save as aforesaid, all and every the provisions in the said act contained in any way relating to the recovery of such instalments and sums, or enabling any person liable to the payment of such compositions to recover against any person any sum whatsoever on account of such liability, shall, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, remain in full force and effect as if the right to the said compositions were still subsisting.

Persons liable to payment of instalments may apply for remission by memorial to the lord lieutenant, who may refer the same for investigation, and upon report thereof, remit the whole or part thereof.

“III. And be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any person liable to the payment of any of the said instalments now due and unpaid, or who may be liable to the payment of any instalment which shall become due on the first day of November in this present year, to apply by memorial to the lord lieutenant of Ireland, describing the character in which he may be so liable, and stating what, if any, of the compositions, together with and in addition to which any sums were made payable in respect of the advances repayable by such instalment under the said recited act, may at or previous to the passing of this act, or would at the time of such instalments falling due, be, if this act had not been made, payable by persons being both the owners and occupiers of the lands charged with such compositions, and also stating what, if any, of the said sums so added to such compositions have been received by the memorialist, and praying that the whole or any part of such instalment may be remitted; and the said lord lieutenant in council shall refer each such memorial to such person or persons as he may think proper, who shall require the memorialist to prove before him or them the several matters and things stated in such memorial by such evidence as the nature of the case may admit, and shall investigate the facts and circumstances by all such ways and means as he or they shall think fit, subject to such rules and directions as the said lord lieutenant of Ireland in council shall from time to time subscribe, and shall report thereon to the said lord lieutenant in council, who shall thereupon have power and authority, as hereinafter directed, to remit the whole or any part of such instalment, and the clerk of the council shall certify the same to the commissioners of the Treasury; and if they shall remit the whole of such instalment, the said commissioners of the Treasury shall direct satisfaction thereof to be duly entered and recorded in the proper office of the Exchequer; and if they shall remit only a part of such instalment, the said commissioners of the Treasury shall direct satisfaction of the whole to be duly entered and recorded upon payment of the residue of such instalment.

"IV. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for such person or persons to whom any such memorial may be referred to examine upon oath or affirmation (which oath or affirmation he or they is or are hereby authorized to administer) any person willing to be examined touching any matter or thing relating to the subject of such reference, and also to receive any affidavit or deposition in writing upon oath or affirmation made before any justice of the peace (and which any such justice is hereby authorized to administer).

"V. Provided always, and be it enacted, that the said lord lieutenant in council shall remit every such instalment as aforesaid, unless the same shall be found to be due by any lay improprator in respect of advances made on account of any tithes or compositions for tithes charged upon lands the estate and property of such improprator, or unless the person liable to such instalment shall be found to have received the whole or some part of the sums so added to the said compositions or unless the whole or some part of the sums so added to the said compositions shall be found to be payable by persons being both the owners and occupiers at the same time of the lands charged with such compositions; and in the two last-mentioned cases the said lord lieutenant and council shall remit so much but no more of such instalment as shall be equivalent to the sums so added to the said compositions, and which shall not have been received by the person liable to such instalment, or shall not be payable by persons being both the owners and occupiers at the same time of the lands charged with such compositions; and the decision of the said lord lieutenant in council shall be final and conclusive of the right of any memorialist to the remission of the whole or any part of any instalment under this act.

"VI. And be it enacted, that in any case where the said lord lieutenant in council shall remit the whole of any such instalment it shall not be lawful for the person so relieved from his liability thereto to sue for or recover any sum added to the said compositions in respect of the advances on account whereof such instalment was made payable; and in any case when the said lord lieutenant in council shall remit a part of any instalment it shall not be lawful for the person so relieved to sue for or recover any such sum so added to the said compositions from or against any person other than a person being both the owner and occupier of the lands charged with the said composition; and all and every other the persons liable to the payment of any sum added to the said compositions, or payable in respect of such additional sums under the provisions of the said recited act of the third and fourth year of his late majesty's reign on account of advances thereunder, shall, in the event of the remission of the whole or any part of the instalment payable on account of such advances, be and they are hereby exonerated and discharged from the payment thereof, without prejudice nevertheless to any payment heretofore made under the provisions of the said recited act.

"VII. And be it enacted, that every parcel of land charged with or in respect whereof the said tithe compositions or any applotment or assessment thereof would have been payable if this act had not been passed, shall be and become severally liable to and charged with the payment of an annual sum or rent-charge equal to three fourths of the annual amount of such tithe compositions, and that such rent-charges shall, except as hereinafter excepted, be payable by the party having in such lands respectively the first estate of inheritance, or other estate or interest equivalent to a perpetual estate or interest as hereinafter defined, under which or derived wherefrom there shall be no such perpetual estate or interest, according to the quantity of such lands comprised in each such estate or interest: provided always, that any landlord who shall have undertaken the payment of any composition for tithes under the provisions of the hereinbefore recited act of the second and third years of the reign of his late majesty shall, for and during the continuance of his estate and interest in the lands charged with the rent-charge payable in lieu of such composition, be liable to the payment of such rent-charge, provided he has an estate not less than an estate of inheritance in such lands; and that such rent-charges shall take effect from the first day of November last past, and that the first payment of such rent-charges shall become due on the first day of November in this present year, and be then paid by one entire payment; and that the said

"VIII. And be it enacted, that any estate or interest held under any deed or instrument containing any provision, contract, or covenant for the perpetual renewal (1) thereof and any estate or interest held for any term of years, whereof a

(1) Covenant for the perpetual renewal.—In Henderson v. Derry (Dean of), (1 Irish Circ. Rep. 631.), it appeared, that the respondent was the rector of the parish where the premises, in respect of which the tithe rent-charge was claimed, were situate, and that the appellant was the occupier of such premises; which were part of the estates in fee of the Longford family, and had been originally demised to Lord Londonderry, for certain lives, with a covenant for perpetual renewal. Lord Londonderry had subsequently demised the same premises to one Campbell, for lives, with a covenant to renew to him, as often as his (Lord Londonderry's) lease should be renewed. In 1788, Campbell demised to one Thompson, for three lives, with a toties quoties covenant for renewal, similar to the last. Thompson's interest in the premises, became vested in one Burnside, who, in 1812, mortgaged it for his whole estate, to one Catherine Dunn, to secure 600*l.* and interest. The appellant, afterwards married Catherine Dunn. The mortgagor had gone to, and had died in America, leaving an infant son his heir at law. The appellant had proceeded under the Mortgage Act, to get a receiver, but an arrangement had been entered into, and a deed executed in pursuance of it, by which the appellant was to go into possession, and continue in such possession, until his debt should be paid by the receipt of the rents. He had, accordingly, gone into possession, and had continued therein for twenty years. All the lives mentioned in the several demises had been more than twelve years dead. The formal proofs were admitted.

Counsel for the appellant stated, that the first question in the case was, whether the covenant by Campbell with Thompson, was a covenant for perpetual renewal, within the meaning of Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 109, s. 8. That it was not an absolute covenant between immediate landlord and tenant, which was the kind contemplated by that section: and that as all the lives were long since dead, the appellant was only tenant from year to year, not holding under any deed, and, therefore, not liable at law as occupier. That in equity he could not be liable, as he went into possession to hold only until his debt should be paid, in which case the mortgagor, as having the entire estate, was the person who was liable. That the respondent ought to have proceeded either against the heir at law of the mortgagor, or against the lands; and as the 27th section gave the rent-charge priority over all other charges and mortgages, the appellant could not set up his mortgage in bar of the respondent's claim.

Mr. Baron Pennefather observed, "As to the first point, I think that the covenant in this case, is a covenant for perpetual renewal, within the meaning of the statute, the words of which, 'any covenant, contract, or provision,' &c., are very comprehensive, and I therefore think that the lessee would be liable to the rent-charge. Then, as to the other point, it is clear, that there need not be a legal estate; but in this case it appears, that the entire interest is in the appellant, and that he is now entitled to get a renewal. I do not think, that there is anything in the special agreement, about the appellant going into possession, which would alter the position of mortgagor and mortgagee. The 27th section of the act was made in aid of, and not to the prejudice of the tithe rent-charge; but the appellant wishes to introduce substantially into that section, a clause not to be found there, viz., that no mortgage shall be charged as a ter-tenant, or occupier. The mortgage is charged as the transferee of the entire interest, in the same manner as he would be liable to the payment of the rent, and to the performance of a covenant in the lease, whether he took possession or not; not because the covenant is one which runs with the land, but because he is the

"IX. And be it enacted, that where by the laws now in force in Ireland any person shall be entitled to hold and occupy under any lease or demise the lands thereby demised free from the payment of tithes or composition of tithes, he shall not be liable to the payment of the said rent-charge, but the party having in such lands the first estate of inheritance or other equivalent estate or interest as before described, expectant or in reversion, and who would not be entitled to a like exemption (1) under the laws aforesaid, shall be liable to such payment: provided always, that in case of the forfeiture, surrender, or other determination of any estate or interest, the owner whereof may be liable to the payment of such rent-charge as aforesaid, the party having the first estate of inheritance or other equivalent estate or interest as before described, in remainder or reversion, shall become liable to the said payment of such rent-charge: provided also, that in case of any such devolution of interest, no more than the amount of one year's arrear of rent-charge shall be a charge on the lands subject to the payment of such annual rent-charge.

"X. And be it enacted, that whenever any person who would have been liable to the payment of any composition for tithes if this act had not been made, shall hold the lands in respect whereof such composition for tithes would have been so

(1) Like exemption.—The lessees, and all persons deriving through them, of leases made after the 16th of August, 1832, and before the 15th of August, 1838, and not made in pursuance of any covenant, are exempt from the payment of tithe rent-charge, as long as their leases shall continue; thus in Moore v. Garde, (1 Irish Circ. Rep. 354,) (which was an appeal by consent from a civil bill decree,) the action was for tithe rent-charge, and was brought against the appellant, as having the first estate of inheritance.

It appeared, that the appellant held under a lease for lives, renewable for ever, which bore date the 11th of July, 1835, and did not appear to have been made in pursuance of any previous agreement. By the 13th section of the Tithe Composition Act, (Stat. 2 & 3 Gul. 4, c. 119,) the lessees of all leases made after the 16th August, 1832, and not made by virtue of any covenant, are exempt from the payment of tithes, or composition of tithes; and by the ninth section of the Tithe Rent-charge Act, (Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 109,) this exemption is confirmed to those who were then entitled to it, as long as their interest should continue. It was contended, that before the appellant in the present case was not, therefore, liable to the tithe rent-charge, and that the decree must be reversed. O'Leary on Tithe Rent-Charge, 73.

It was urged by the counsel for the respondents; that although it did not appear on the face of the appellant's lease, that it was made in pursuance of any covenant or agreement, yet such was the fact, and that the best way of ascertaining it, was by examining the appellant, the words of the statute permitting such evidence; and that if it were not so, the proviso would have been almost inoperative.

Upon such facts and arguments, Mr. Serjeant Grease observed: "I think that if I were to allow the appellant in this case to be examined, I would be setting a most dangerous precedent; and I shall, therefore, not do so. If parcel evidence were admitted to explain any part of a lease, it might as well be admitted to vary the amount of rent, or alter the nature of the contract in some other way, and such a practice would be fraught with the most dangerous consequences."

"Decree reversed, and a dismiss entered on the merits."

"XXVI. And whereas doubts have arisen with respect to the effect of certificates for the composition of tithes in Ireland made under the authority of the said acts for establishing such compositions, as respects the rights or titles of persons having or claiming to have estates or interests in the tithes or compositions to which such certificates respectively relate; and whereas the said rent-charges will be payable to or divided among the several persons entitled thereto according to the proportions of such compositions payable to them respectively as in such certificates stated; be it therefore enacted, that no certificate made under the said acts or any of them, or which may be amended under the provisions of this act, shall, as against any person claiming any estate or interest in tithes or composition for tithes in Ireland, and asserting such claim by any proceeding at law or in equity, be deemed to be evidence of the right or title of any person in such certificate described; and that if it shall be decided by any court of competent jurisdiction that any person other than the person in such certificate described, or those deriving under such person, would have been entitled to such composition or to the tithes to which the same shall relate, the person so declared entitled shall be thereupon authorized and entitled to receive the rent-charge or proportion thereof accruing due under authority of this act, in lieu of the composition in such certificate mentioned, as if originally named therein; but until such decision such certificate, and all payments made under the same, shall be good, valid, and effectual against all persons whatsoever.

Rent-charges, how to be recovered.

"XXVII. And be it enacted, that the said rent-charges shall have priority over all other charges, liens, mortgages, and incumbrances whatsoever affecting the lands chargeable therewith, and shall and may be recovered by the ways and means hereinafter mentioned; (that is to say,) by bill in equity, action of debt or on the case, or if not exceeding twenty pounds, by civil bill in the court of the assistant barrister or chairman of the sessions of the county wherein the land charged therewith may be situate, or by distress, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained.

Several parties may be included in one bill in equity.

"XXVIII. And be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful to include in the same bill in equity or in the same petition all or any number of the persons in any one parish who may make default in payment of such rent-charges, in like manner as might have been done in suits in equity for the recovery of tithes or tithe compositions in lieu of which the said rent-charges are given, without being liable to any objection on the ground of multifariousness, but with liberty to any of such defendants, on payment of the demand against such defendant, and his proportion of the costs, to have his name struck out of the bill or petition.

Where person liable to payment of rent-charge shall occupy the land, the arrear may be distrained for.

"XXIX. And be it enacted, that where the person liable to the payment of any rent-charge shall occupy the land in respect whereof the same may be payable it shall and may be lawful to make any distress or distresses for any arrears of such rent-charge or proportion thereof; and such distress shall be subject in all respects to the like regulations and attended with the like privileges and advantages as are by law established in respect of any distress by any landlord for the recovery of rent.

And be it enacted, that where the person liable to the payment of any rent-charge shall occupy the land in respect whereof the same may be payable it shall and may be lawful to make any distress or distresses for any arrears of such rent-charge or proportion thereof; and such distress shall be subject in all respects to the like regulations and attended with the like privileges and advantages as are by law established in respect of any distress by any landlord for the recovery of rent.

Where rent-charge in arrear, and the person liable thereto shall not be in occupation of the lands charged therewith, or where such person may not be known, a court of equity may order the rents of such lands to be received

And be it enacted, that upon the expiration of the time in the said proclamation limited, and in default of payment as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for the said attorney-general to apply by petition, either to the court of Chancery or Exchequer in Ireland, or, in any case where the sum sought to be recovered shall not exceed twenty pounds, then, at the option of the said attorney-general, to the court of the assistant barrister of the county or riding where the person in default shall reside, or if he shall reside in the county of Dublin, to the court of the chairman of the sessions of the peace for the said county, praying the order of such court, assistant barrister, or chairman against any person in default, who shall be named and distinguished in any such schedule as aforesaid as having such estate or interest as hereinbefore described in the lands charged with any composition due and in arrear; and the said courts shall summarily examine into the matter of every such petition, and for that purpose call before them and examine ex vivo any person upon oath, or ascertain the truth by interrogatories in writing or by affidavit, and thereupon make such order or orders, as to such court shall seem just; and the costs shall be in the discretion of the court as if the proceeding was between subject and subject; and in case any person against whom any such order shall be so prayed shall not, by himself or some attorney or counsel, attend at the time appointed for proceeding upon such petition, and show that he had not when such composition accrued due such an estate or interest as hereinbefore described in the lands chargeable with such composition, the liability of such person shall be taken pro confesso, and an order shall be forthwith made as against every such person for such amount of composition as shall be proved to be so due and in arrear in respect of the said lands; and the sum expressed in any such order, and the costs, shall be taken to be a debt due to her majesty, and recovered accordingly; provided that the like costs shall be payable on any such application to any assistant barrister or chairman as on any proceeding by civil bill.

"XLIV. And be it enacted, that no objection to any such petition on account of the demands thereby sought to be recovered being distinct and multifarious, nor for want of parties or want of form, shall be received; and no such petition shall abate on account of the death of any of the parties; and in case of any such death the said attorney-general may proceed against the representatives of any person so dying, having first served them with a notice thereof; and upon its appearing to the court that such notice had been given such court shall inquire into the matter of such petition as against the representative of any person so dying in the same manner as against the said person were he living, and the said court respectively shall proceed thereon accordingly: provided always, that at least fourteen days before any proceeding shall be taken under any such petition as aforesaid, a notice thereof shall be served upon the person against whom any order may be thereby prayed.

“XLV. And be it enacted, that all monies paid, received, or recovered on account of any tithes or compositions for tithes vested in her majesty by virtue of the hereinbefore contained provision shall, after deducting the costs and charges attendant on the receipt or recovery thereof, be, in such manner as the said commissioners of the Treasury shall direct, paid over to the respective parties in whose right so transferred to the crown the same may have been received or recovered.

“XLVI. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners of the Treasury, or any three or more of them, to order and direct that such sum or sums of money as may be necessary to defray the expenses attendant upon the revision of the said memorials and schedules shall be paid to such persons, at such times and in such manner as they shall think fit, from and out of the monies accruing to the credit of the said account to be kept as hereinbefore provided at the said bank of Ireland and Exchequer; and the residue of the monies arising to the credit of the said account shall be applied to the relief of the several memorialists who shall be declared to be entitled to relief under this act as hereinbefore provided; and such residue shall be distributed rateably amongst them in proportion to, but not exceeding, the amount of the several sums found due to them respectively on account of the arrears of composition payable in and for the said years one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, and one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, included in the said several schedules, exclusive of any sums received or recovered and paid to such persons under the hereinbefore contained provision; and the said commissioners of the Treasury, or any three or more of them, shall direct payment to be made to each such memorialist accordingly; and the surplus (if any) shall be carried to and made part of the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

“XLVII. And whereas certain sums of money are now due and accruing due to the ecclesiastical commissioners for Ireland by reason of instalments accrued due in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, and one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, and one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, and this present year, on account of monies lent and advanced by the trustees and commissioners of first-fruits in Ireland for the purposes of building mansions or glebe houses and making other improvements, or for the purchase of houses for the habitation and residence of incumbents of benefices and their successors, or for the purchase of glebes or demesne lands for the erection of such glebe houses or offices, and which sums were vested in the said ecclesiastical commissioners by the hereinbefore recited act passed in the third and fourth years of his late majesty's reign: and whereas it is expedient to relieve the incumbents who have been unable to pay such instalments for the said years one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, and one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, and one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, and this present year, from immediate liability thereto, but so nevertheless that such sums shall remain charged upon their respective benefices and promotions, and upon the incumbents having or succeeding to the profits and emoluments thereof, but that the same shall be repaid by instalments computed at a reduced rate; be it therefore enacted, that no suit or proceeding shall be taken by or on behalf of her majesty, or by or in the name of the said ecclesiastical commissioners, or any other person, for the recovery of any such instalment which may have accrued due on the first day of July one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, or on the first day of July one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, or on the first day of July one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, or on the first day of July in this present year, on account of any monies lent or advanced by the said trustees and commissioners of first-fruits for the purposes aforesaid.

“L. And be it enacted, that all and every the provisions of this act shall apply and extend to the said compositions for tithes belonging to the queen's majesty, and that rent-charges shall become payable in lieu thereof, and that such rent-charges shall be collected and recovered and in all other respects managed and dealt with according to the provisions of the acts in force relative to the hereditary possessions and land revenues of the crown in Ireland; and that nothing herein contained shall extend in any respect to alter or repeal the provisions of any act or acts now in force with respect to the application of the annual income arising from such tithes or compositions, or the sale thereof, or the application of the monies arising from any such sales, but that such last-mentioned provisions shall extend and apply to the annual income arising from the rent-charges which will become payable in lieu of such tithes or compositions under the provisions of this act, and to authorize sales thereof, and to direct the application of the monies arising from the sale of such rent-charges, according to the nature thereof respectively, in like manner as to the annual income arising from such tithes and the monies arising from sales thereof: provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall in any manner prejudice or affect the right of her said majesty in or to any quit rent or other rent or payment reserved upon or arising out of any grant, or payable on account of any advowsons, rectories, vicarages, or other benefice or preferment, or office spiritual, or tithes.

“LI. And whereas by the said act of the third and fourth years of the reign of his late majesty King William the Fourth it is enacted that a certified copy of or extract from the memorial and schedule or return attached thereto, a duplicate of which is by that act required to be lodged with the clerk of the peace, shall be sufficient evidence to all intents and purposes of the several matters and things therein set forth; be it enacted, that every clerk of the peace with whom any such duplicate, memorial, and schedule or return attached thereto is lodged, shall and he is hereby required to furnish a certified copy of or extract from the same respectively to any person requiring the same, on payment of a sum not exceeding three-pence for every ninety words contained in such copy or extract, and every sum of money set forth in such copy or extract shall be reckoned only as a single word.

“VI. And whereas by virtue of the said act passed in the first and second years of the reign of her present majesty, intituled, ‘An Act to abridge the holding of Benefices in Plurality, and to make better Provision for the Residence of the Clergy,’ it is amongst other things enacted, that when with respect to his own diocese it should appear to the archbishop of the province, or when the bishop of any diocese should represent to the said archbishop, that any tithing, hamlet, chapelry, place, or district within the diocese of such archbishop, or the diocese of such bishop, (as the case may be,) might be advantageously separated from any parish or mother church, and either be constituted a separate benefice by itself, or be united to any other parish to which it might be more conveniently annexed, or to any other adjoining tithing, hamlet, chapelry, place, or district, parochial or extra-parochial, so as to form a separate parish or benefice, or that any extra-parochial place might with advantage be annexed to any parish to which it is contiguous, or be constituted a separate parish for ecclesiastical purposes; and the said archbishop or bishop should draw up a scheme in writing, (the scheme of such bishop to be transmitted to the said archbishop for his consideration,) describing the mode in which it appeared to him that the alteration might best be effected, and how the changes consequent on such alteration in respect to ecclesiastical jurisdiction, glebe lands, tithes, rent-charges, and other ecclesiastical dues, rates, and payments, and in respect to patronage and rights to pews, might be made, with justice to all parties interested; and if the patron or patrons of the benefice or benefices to be affected by such alteration should consent, in writing under his or their hands, to such scheme, or to such modification thereof as the said archbishop might approve, and the said archbishop should, on full consideration and inquiry, be satisfied with any such scheme or modification thereof, and should certify the same and such consent as aforesaid by his report to her majesty in council, it should be lawful for her majesty in council to make an order for carrying such scheme, or modification thereof, as the case might be, into effect; and such order, being registered in the registry of the diocese, which the registrar was thereby required to do, should be forthwith binding on all persons whatsoever, including the incumbent or incumbents of the benefice or benefices to be affected thereby, if he or they should have consented thereto in writing under his or their hands; but if such incumbent or incumbents should not have so consented thereto, the order should not come into operation until the next avoidance of the benefice by the incumbent objecting to the alteration, or by the surviving incumbent objecting, if more than one should object thereto, and in such case the order should forthwith after such avoidance become binding on all persons whatsoever: and whereas it is expedient that the said provisions should be extended to cases notwithstanding the vacancy or vacancies of the benefice or benefices thereby to be affected; and also that when by such order a separate parish for ecclesiastical purposes is constituted, the same should become a perpetual curacy and benefice, with cure of souls; be it therefore enacted, that any such scheme or modification may be drawn up according to the regulations and directions in such act contained, subject to the consent in writing of the patron or patrons of the benefice or benefices to be affected thereby, under his or their hands, notwithstanding the vacancy of such benefice or benefices; and it shall be lawful for her majesty in council thereupon to make an order for carrying such scheme, or modification thereof, as the case may be, into effect; and such order, being registered in the registry of the diocese as directed by the said act, shall come into operation and shall be forthwith binding on all persons whatsoever, notwithstanding such vacancy or vacancies.

And be it further enacted, that the provisions contained in the said last-recited act touching the party or parties who shall be considered patron or patrons, and the manner in which the consent of the patrons shall in certain cases be given, for the purposes of such act, shall apply to the consent of the patron or patrons hereinbefore last required to be given.

council as aforesaid a separate parish for ecclesiastical purposes is constituted, the same shall, on registration thereof, and with the consent in writing of the incumbent or incumbents of the benefice or benefices to be thereby affected, become a perpetual curacy and benefice, and the minister thereof, duly nominated and licensed thereto, and his successors, shall be a body politic and corporate, with perpetual succession, and may receive and take to himself and his successors all such lands, tenements, tithes, rent-charges, and hereditaments as shall be granted unto him or them, and such perpetual curate shall thenceforth have, within the limits of the district parish formed under the Church Building Acts for the church of such perpetual curacy, sole and exclusive cure of souls, and shall not in anywise be subject to the control or interference of the incumbent or incumbents of the benefice or benefices to be affected by such order, if he or they shall have consented to such order as aforesaid; but if such incumbent or incumbents shall not have so consented thereto, this last-mentioned provision shall not come into operation until the next avoidance of the benefice by the incumbent objecting thereto, or by the surviving incumbent objecting, if more than one shall object thereto, and in such case the last-mentioned provision shall forthwith after such avoidance come into operation, and shall be binding on all persons whatsoever.

“IX. And be it further enacted, that the powers granted by the hereinbefore recited act passed in the first and second years of the reign of her present majesty (chapter one hundred and seven) to her majesty’s commissioners for building new churches, of making, with certain consents, any church or chapel the parish church of the parish within which the same is situate, instead of the ancient parish church, and of making such ancient parish church a district church or chapel, with or without a district, as the said commissioners shall in such case direct, shall not extend or be construed to extend to making any church or chapel now or hereafter to be built and endowed under the powers of the last-mentioned act, or the hereinbefore recited act passed in the first and second years of the reign of his late majesty King William the Fourth, the parish church, nor to the making any church or chapel the parish church as aforesaid, the advowson, right of presentation, or nomination of or to which shall belong to any other person or persons than to the patron of such ancient parish church, without the consent in writing under the hands of the patron or patrons and of the incumbent or minister of any such church or chapel herein mentioned.

“X. And be it further enacted, that where a church or chapel has been built or purchased and endowed, and the patronage thereof granted under the provisions of the hereinbefore recited acts of the first and second years of the reign of his said majesty King William the Fourth, and of the first and second years of the reign of her present majesty, chapter one hundred and seven, or either of them, and where a particular district has been assigned to such church or chapel under the provisions of such first-named act, the minister or perpetual curate of such church or chapel shall have exclusive cure of souls within such district, and shall not be in anywise subject to the control or interference of the rector, vicar, or minister of the mother church of the parish or place out of which such district shall have been taken, any statute or law to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

“XI. And whereas it is by the said recited act passed in the first and second years of the reign of her present majesty, chapter one hundred and seven, enacted, that in all district churches and district chapelries the licence of the stipendiary curate appointed to serve the chapel of such chapelry shall not be rendered void by the avoidance of the church of the parish or district parish in which such chapel is situate, unless the same shall be revoked by the bishop of the diocese under his hand and seal: and whereas doubts exist as to the extent and meaning of such provision; be it therefore enacted and declared, that the same shall apply to the licence of the stipendiary curate of a district chapelry and to the licence of the stipendiary curate of a district parish church.

“XII. And whereas it is expedient to make provision for the more permanent security of the endowments and emoluments which shall have been or may hereafter be provided for the use or benefit of any church or chapel, whether built,

And be it further enacted, that in all cases in which such consent of the said governors of the bounty of Queen Anne shall have been so given, the money provided for such endowments shall be paid to the treasurer for the time being of the said governors: and the receipt or receipts of such treasurer shall be effectual discharges or an effectual discharge for so much money as in such receipts or receipt shall be expressed, to the person or persons paying the same, and after obtaining such receipts or receipt the person or persons paying such money shall be absolutely discharged from all liability touching such money, and from all trusts relating thereto.

“XIV. And whereas by an act passed in the first year of the reign of her present majesty, (chapter twenty-three,) intituled, ‘An Act to amend the Law for providing fit Houses for the Beneficed Clergy,’ (an omission in which was supplied by another act passed in the same session of parliament, chapter twenty-nine,) it was enacted that the monies to arise from the sale or sales of the residence house, gardens, orchards, and appurtenances, and lands, belonging to any benefice by the said act under certain circumstances authorized to be sold, should be paid to the said governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, to be by them, with the consent of the ordinary and patron, applied and disposed of in or towards the erection or purchase of some other house and offices, or the purchase of an orchard, garden, and appurtenances, or land for the site of a house, any or either of them, together with land contiguous thereto, and not exceeding twelve acres, suitable for the residence and occupation of the incumbent of such benefice: and whereas the said act makes no provision for authorizing the said governors to lay out at interest the purchase monies which in any case shall be paid to them under the authority thereof, in the meantime and until such monies shall be applied and disposed of according to the directions of the said act, nor for the application of the surplus of such monies in case the same monies shall not be wholly applied and disposed of to the purposes contemplated by the said act; be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said governors and they are hereby required to lay out and invest the said purchase monies which shall from time to time come into their hands under and by virtue of the said act in the purchase of such stocks, funds, and securities, and at such rate of interest, as they shall think proper, and shall from time to time receive the dividends and interest which shall become payable in respect thereof, and add the same by way of accumulation to the principal, and so from time to time so long as the same shall remain in their hands, or until the same, or so much thereof as shall be required, shall have been applied and disposed of by the said governors in the manner and for the purposes in the said act mentioned; and further, that in case, after the complete execution of the duty or trust imposed on the said governors by the said act of parliament, or of so much thereof as shall be in their power, any sum of money shall remain in their hands undisposed of, such surplus shall be appropriated by the said governors to the particular benefice on account of which the same shall have been received, and shall be applicable and disposable by them for the benefit of such benefice, in such and the same manner, and with such and the same powers of investment, and other powers and authorities in all respects, according to the rules and regulations of the said governors for the time being, as if the said monies, or the stocks or funds which might be purchased therewith, had been appropriated by the said governors to such benefice out of the general funds and profits of the said governors, or otherwise, for the benefit and augmentation thereof.

VICT. C. 49.

“XV. And whereas some of the lands and hereditaments which were formerly purchased by the governors of the said bounty, or were otherwise appropriated or annexed, by or with the consent or concurrence of the said governors, to particular benefices, for the augmentation thereof, are situate at an inconvenient distance from the benefices to which they respectively belong, and in such and some other special cases a sale of the lands and hereditaments which have been or may hereafter be so appropriated or annexed may be deemed advantageous; be it therefore enacted, that in every case where any lands or hereditaments which, in consequence of any purchase, allotment, benefaction, donation, or exchange, or otherwise howsoever, shall have been appropriated or annexed to any benefice for the augmentation thereof, by or with the concurrence of the said governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, are situate elsewhere than within the parish or parishes of such benefice, or some adjoining parish or parishes, it shall be lawful for the incumbent of such benefice, (with the consent of the said governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, and of the ordinary and patron of such benefice, to be testified as hereinafter mentioned,) absolutely to sell and dispose of the said lands or hereditaments, or any part thereof, to any person or persons whomsoever, either together or in parcels, and either by public sale or by private contract, for such sum or sums of money as to the said governors, ordinary, and patron shall seem fair and reasonable; and upon payment of the purchase money for the same, as hereinafter directed, by deed indented, or in the case of any lands or hereditaments of copyhold or customary tenure by surrender or other customary mode of assurance, to convey and assure the lands or hereditaments comprised in such sale unto and to the use of the purchaser or purchasers thereof, his, her, or their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns respectively, or as he, she, or they shall direct or appoint; provided always, that the consent of the said governors, patron, and ordinary to every such sale shall be testified by their respectively executing the deed or other assurance by which the lands or hereditaments comprised in such sale shall be conveyed or assured; except that in the case of any lands or hereditaments of copyhold or customary tenure which shall be conveyed or assured by surrender such consent may be testified by any writing under the corporate seal, or the hand and seal, (as the case may be,) of each of the consenting parties, which writing shall be produced to the lord or steward of the manor of which the said premises shall be holden, and shall be a sufficient authority to him for accepting from the incumbent and other necessary parties a surrender of the same premises, and such writing shall be entered with the surrender upon the court rolls of the said manor.

Power in certain cases and with certain consents to sell lands purchased for or annexed to benefices for the augmentation thereof by the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne.

“XVI. And be it further enacted, that in every case where any lands or hereditaments which shall have been so appropriated or annexed to any benefice as aforesaid shall be situate within the parish or parishes of such benefice, or some adjoining parish or parishes, but on account of any special circumstance or circumstances a sale of the said lands or hereditaments, or any part thereof, shall be deemed advantageous, it shall be lawful for the incumbent of such benefice, with the consent of the said governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, and of the ordinary and patron of such benefice, to be testified as aforesaid, and with the further consent of the archbishop for the time being of the province in which such benefice is situated, to be testified in like manner, to sell and dispose of and convey and assure the said lands or hereditaments, or any part thereof, in such manner as is hereinbefore directed or authorized with respect to any such lands or hereditaments where the same shall not be situate within any such parish or parishes as aforesaid.

“XVII. And whereas it is expedient that the power which by the said act of the first and second years of the reign of her present majesty is given to the incumbent of a benefice, with the consent and approbation of the ordinary and patron thereof and of the archbishop of the province, to sell the residence house, garden, orchard, and appurtenances belonging to his benefice, with land contiguous thereto, not exceeding twelve acres, should be extended and made applicable to other houses and buildings belonging to any benefice under the circumstances hereinafter mentioned; be it therefore enacted, that in any case in which any dwelling house, shop, warehouse, or other erection or building (other than the house of residence, belonging to any benefice shall be so old and ruinous as that it would be useless or inexpedient to expend money in repairing and maintaining the same, or for other good and sufficient reasons it shall be thought advisable to sell and dispose of the same, it shall and may be lawful for the incumbent of such benefice and he is hereby authorized and empowered, with the consent and approbation of the ordinary and patron thereof and of the archbishop of the province, to be signified in the manner prescribed by the last-mentioned act, absolutely to sell and dispose of such dwelling house, shop, warehouse, or other erection or building, with the yards, gardens, orchard, croft, and appurtenances thereto belonging, or any of them, to any person or persons whomsoever, either altogether, or in parcels, and for such sum or sums of money as to such ordinary, patron, and archbishop shall appear fair and reasonable, and upon payment of the purchase money for the same as hereinafter mentioned, by deed indented, or in the case of copyhold or customary hereditaments by surrender or other customary mode of assurance, to convey and assure the hereditaments which shall be so sold unto and to the use of the purchaser or purchasers thereof, his or their heirs or assigns, or as he or they shall direct or appoint.

Purchase monies to be paid to the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne;

“XVIII. And be it further enacted, that the monies to arise from any sale or sales which shall be made under any of the provisions of this act shall be paid to the said governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, and that the receipts of the treasurer for the time being of the said governors shall be sufficient discharges for the said monies, or for so much thereof as in such receipts respectively shall be expressed to be received, and shall effectually release and exonerate the person or persons paying the same from all responsibility in respect of the application thereof; and further, that no purchaser or purchasers shall be in anywise bound or concerned to ascertain or inquire whether any special circumstance or circumstances or reason or reasons shall exist on account of which any such sale or sales as aforesaid may be deemed advantageous or advisable, or whether such circumstance or circumstances or reason or reasons shall be sufficient to authorize such sale or sales.

And be it enacted, that all the monies to arise from any such sale or sales as aforesaid, (subject nevertheless, in the case of any lands or hereditaments which shall have been appropriated or annexed to any benefice by or with the concurrence of the said governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, to any stipulation or agreement which the said governors in their discretion may think proper to make for payment thereof of the costs and expenses of such sale or sales or any part thereof,) shall be appropriated by the said governors to the particular benefice to which the hereditaments comprised in such sale shall have previously belonged, and shall be applicable and disposable by them for the benefit and augmentation of such benefice in such and the same manner, and with such and the same powers of investment, and other powers and authorities, in all respects, according to the rules and regulations of the said governors for the time being, as if the said monies or the stocks or funds which might be purchased therewith, were then originally appropriated by the said governors to such benefice out of the general funds and profits of the said governors, or otherwise, for the benefit and augmentation thereof.

such benefice shall be a minor, idiot, lunatic, or feme covert, then and in every such case the consent required by this act on the part of the patron of such benefice shall and may be testified by the execution of such deed or assurance or other writing as aforesaid by such and the same persons as by the said act of the first and second years of the reign of her present majesty, chapter twenty-three, are in like cases directed or authorized to testify the consent of the patron to the exercise of the several powers given by the said act, or by certain other acts therein mentioned or referred to; and that in all other cases the consent required by this act on the part of the patron of any benefice shall be given by the person or persons who would be entitled to present or nominate or to collate to such benefice in case the same were actually vacant at the time of giving such consent.

“III. And be it declared and enacted, that all the powers and provisions of the said first-recited act (except only so far as the same are varied by the said secondly-recited act) shall extend and apply to all dignities, prebends, canonries, and benefices without cure of souls which have become vacant since the fourth day of February in the first-recited act mentioned, or which shall become vacant during the continuance of this act, except only as to so much of the profits and emoluments of any prebend or canonry to which a successor has been or may be appointed under the said recited acts or one of them, or this act, as may have accrued or may accrue since or after the appointment of such successor.

“V. And be it enacted, that, in order to prevent any difficulty which by reason of the restrictions contained in the said secondly-recited act might occur in any cathedral church in the filling up of the deanery thereof, or of a canonry residentiary therein, in consequence of the provisions of any statute, or of any usage or custom of such church, nothing in the said secondly-recited act or in this act contained shall, during the vacancy of the deanery of any cathedral church, prevent the appointment or collation of any spiritual person to any canonry, prebend, or dignity, or his appointment to any canonry residentiary in such church, to the intent and purpose that such spiritual person may be appointed, elected, or otherwise admitted to the deanery of the same church, nor the appointment of any spiritual person already holding a canonry, prebend, or dignity in such cathedral church to any canonry residentiary therein, to the same intent and purpose, nor during the vacancy of any canonry residentiary in any cathedral church, which, notwithstanding the restrictions aforesaid, may, according to the provisions of the said secondly-recited act or of this act, be filled up, shall prevent the appointment or collation of any spiritual person to any canonry, prebend, or dignity in the same church, to the intent and purpose that such spiritual person may be appointed to such canonry residentiary, but that every spiritual person who by virtue of this provision shall be admitted to any canonry, prebend, or dignity, or to any canonry residentiary, to either of the intents and purposes aforesaid, shall hold and enjoy the same respectively, with all the rights, privileges, and emoluments to the same respectively belonging or appertaining, subject nevertheless to such measures and regulations as may hereafter be enacted respecting the same: provided always, that if after the appointment or collation to any canonry, prebend, or dignity, or the appointment to any canonry residentiary, in any cathedral church, by virtue of this provision, of any spiritual person, to the intent and purpose of his being appointed, elected, or otherwise admitted to the deanery thereof, or to a vacant canonry residentiary therein, any other than such spiritual person shall be appointed, elected, or otherwise admitted to such deanery or last mentioned canonry residentiary, as the case may be, the canonry, prebend, or dignity, or the canonry residentiary, to which such spiritual person shall have been appointed or collated, shall be and be held to be ipso facto vacant, and the appointment, collation, election, or other admission thereto absolutely void and of no effect.”

(1) Appointment of the chaplain:—Prior to Stat. 5 & 6 Gul. 4, c. 76, the city of Bath was incorporated by the name of the mayor, aldermen, and citizens of the city of Bath. The charter contained the grant of a gaol, and a limited criminal jurisdiction, to be exercised by the recorder and the corporate justices, but not extending to felonies. It also authorized the mayor, aldermen, and citizens annually to elect two of themselves to be bailiffs of the said city, and directed that the bailiffs for the time being should be keepers of the gaol of the city. After the passing of the Municipal Corporation Act, the new corporation received the grant of a separate court of quarter sessions, with power to try felonies, and certain persons were appointed justices for the city by commission; but the corporation still continued to elect one bailiff, who continued to be the keeper of the gaol, and appointed the gaoler. In 1842, a new gaol and house of correction was built under the provisions of Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 71, to which the town council had appointed a chaplain: it was held, that the right to appoint the chaplain of the new gaol and house of correction, under Stat. 2 & 3 Vict. c. 56, s. 15, was in the town council, by virtue of their authority to appoint the keeper of the prison, and not in the borough justices. *Regina v. merging or extinguishing the same, the lands in which such merger or extinguishment shall take effect shall be subject to any charge, incumbrance, or liability which lawfully existed on such tithes or rent-charge previous to such merger to the extent of the value of such tithes or rent-charge; and any such charge, incumbrance, or liability shall have priority over any charge or incumbrance existing on such lands at the time of such merger taking effect; and such lands, and the owners thereof for the time being, shall be liable to the same remedies for the recovery of any payment and the performance of any duty in respect of such charge, incumbrance, or liability, or of any penalty or damages for nonpayment or nonperformance thereof respectively, as the said tithes or rent-charge, or the owner thereof for the time being, were or was liable to previous to such merger.

"II. And be it enacted, that every person entitled to exercise the powers for merger of tithes or rent-charge in land under the said acts or any of them, or of this act, may, with the consent of the tithe commissioners for the time being under their hands and seal of office, and of the person to whom the lands in which such merger or extinguishment shall take effect shall belong, either by the deed or other instrument or declaration by which such merger shall be effected, or by any separate deed, instrument, or declaration, to be made in such form as the commissioners shall approve, specially apportion the whole or any part of any such charge, incumbrance, or liability affecting the said tithes or rent-charge so merged or extinguished, or proposed to be merged or extinguished in such lands, upon the same or any part thereof, or upon any other lands of such person held under the same title and for the same estate in the same parish, or upon the several closes or portions of such lands, or according to an acreable rate or rates upon lands of different quality, in such manner and proportion, and to the exclusion of such of them, as the person intending to merge the same, with such consent as aforesaid, may by any such deed, instrument, or declaration direct: provided always, that no land shall be so exclusively charged unless the value thereof shall in the opinion of the said commissioners be at least three times the value of the amount of the charge, incumbrance, or liability charged or intended to be charged thereon, over and above all other charges and incumbrances, if any, affecting the same.

"III. And be it enacted, that the assessor or collector of any rate or tax shall, within forty days after the receipt of a notice in writing signed by any landowner or titheowner interested therein, specify in his assessment made for the purpose of collecting and levying such rate or tax the names of the several occupiers of tithes, lands, and tenements subject to such rate or tax, as well as the sum assessed on the tithes, lands, or tenements held by each such occupier.

"IV. And be it enacted, that where the whole of the great tithes or the whole of the small tithes, or the respective rent-charges in lieu thereof, shall be lawfully subject to any such charge, incumbrance, or liability, and the person entitled to such tithes or rent-charge respectively shall be desirous of apportioning such charge, incumbrance, or liability respectively exclusively upon any part of such tithes or rent-charge, although such person has not the power or does not intend to merge the same under the said acts or this act, such person may, with the like consent of the said commissioners, and in such manner as they shall see fit and prescribe, and also with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, specially apportion such charge, incumbrance, or liability respectively upon any part or portion of the tithes or rent-charge respectively subject thereto, not being in the opinion of the said commissioners less than three times the value of the said charge, incumbrance, or liability, or of such part thereof as shall be so apportioned thereon, or intended so to be.

"V. And be it enacted, that in every such case of special apportionment the costs and expenses of or incident thereto shall be borne by the party at whose instance the same shall have been made, and shall be recoverable as other costs of apportionments are recoverable under the provisions of the said recited acts or either of them, or of this act.

"VI. And be it declared and enacted, that the provisions of the said acts and this act for merger or extinguishment of tithes or rent-charge instead of tithes"

the lands out of which such tithes shall have been issuing, or whereon such rent-charge shall be fixed, do and shall extend to glebe or other land, in all cases where the same and the tithes or rent-charge thereof shall belong to the same person in virtue of his benefice, or of any dignity, office, or appointment held by him.

“VII. And be it enacted, that in every case of merger of tithes or rent-charge issuing out of land of copyhold tenure, and subject to arbitrary fine, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, on the application of the owner of such land, to ascertain, by such ways and means as they shall think fit, the annual value of the tithes or rent-charge so merged or intended to be merged; and the said commissioners shall in such case cause to be endorsed on the deed, declaration, or other instrument effecting such merger a certificate under their hands and seal, setting forth such annual value so ascertained; and in every case of future assessment of fine on the lands which before such merger were subject to such tithes or rent-charge, the parties entitled to such fine shall assess the same as if such lands were subject to the tithes or rent-charge of which the annual value shall be so endorsed; and the production of such deed, declaration, or instrument of merger, or of a duplicate thereof, with such certificate endorsed, or of an office copy of such deed, declaration, or instrument and certificate endorsed thereon, shall be sufficient evidence of the annual value of such tithes or rent-charge.

“VIII. And be it enacted, that, notwithstanding anything in the said acts or any of them contained, in any case where a parochial agreement for rent-charge or for giving land instead of tithes, or any compulsory award, has been duly confirmed by the said commissioners, and it shall appear to them, at any period before the confirmation of the apportionment of such rent-charge, that by reason of fraud, or by the omission or insertion through error of the tithes or lands of any party thereto, or of the name of any person, whether as titheowner or landowner, who ought, or, as the case may be, who ought not, to have been party thereto, or any other manifest error, that such agreement or award would be unjust, and that if such fraud, omission, insertion, or other manifest error had not occurred the said commissioners would have come to a different conclusion in respect of such agreement or award, and would have declined to confirm or would have varied the same previous to such confirmation, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, if they shall see fit, and in their sole discretion, but not otherwise, by a separate award to rectify such agreement or award in any of the matters aforesaid, in such manner as to them shall seem just; and all the provisions and powers of the recited acts relating to compulsory awards shall be applied in every such case, in respect of the matter so dealt with, in as full a manner as if no such agreement or award had been made, or as if the same were made in respect of a separate district; provided always, that in every such separate award the matter so dealt with, and the grounds on which the commissioners shall have seen fit to make the same, shall be recited or otherwise set forth in the draft thereof, in addition to the other particulars required by the said acts, or any of them, to be set forth in compulsory awards; and every such award shall, in the notice of meeting for hearing objections thereto, be called a separate award by way of supplement to the parochial agreement or award in the parish to which such separate award relates.

“IX. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful at any time before the confirmation of any apportionment after a compulsory award in any parish, for the landowners and titheowners, having such interest in the lands and tithes of such parish as is required for the making a parochial agreement to enter into a parochial agreement for the commutation of Easter offerings, mortuaries, or surplice fees, or of the tithes of fish or fishing, or mineral tithes; and all the provisions, conditions, limitations, and powers of the said recited acts or any of them, relating to parochial agreements, so far as the same shall in the judgment of the commissioners be applicable to the subject of the proposed commutation, shall be observed and applied in every such case as if no previous award had been made; and every such agreement may fix the period at which the rent-charge to be paid under such agreement shall commence, but so nevertheless that the same and the subsequent payments thereof shall be made on some day fixed for the payment of the rent-that the provision lastly in this act contained for substituting a fixed rent-charge instead of a contingent rent-charge on lands partially exempt from tithes shall extend and be applicable to such crown lands as aforesaid: provided always, that no such fixed rent-charge shall be substituted instead of such contingent rent-charge on such crown lands without the consent of the persons or officers who are by the said first-recited act respectively required to be substituted in cases of commutation of tithes where the ownership of lands or tithes is vested in her majesty.

ments may be made in respect of tenements and hereditaments to which a right of going on such common is appendant or appurtenant, the tithes whereof would be chargeable on the tenements or hereditaments in respect of which such allotments may be made, and such tenements or hereditaments are not of themselves an adequate security for the rent-charge to be fixed in respect of such tithes; be it therefore declared and enacted, that in every such case the rent-charge to be fixed instead of such tithes shall be a charge upon and recoverable out of any allotments to be in future made in respect of such rights, as well as upon such tenements or hereditaments in respect of which such allotments are made, and by the same ways and means as are provided for the recovery of rent-charges by the said acts or any of them, or this act.

“XV. And be it declared and enacted, that all the provisions in the recited acts or any of them in any way relating to or enabling the pulling down or sale of barns and buildings generally used for housing tithes paid in kind, and the sale of the materials and the site thereof, either with or without any farm buildings or homesteads thereto belonging, and for the conveyance and delivery thereof, and for securing the consideration money for the benefit of the persons thereunto entitled; shall apply to and may be made available by any corporate body or person, whether as trustees or otherwise, by any master and fellows of any college, dean and chapter of any cathedral or collegiate church, master or guardian of any hospital, parson, vicar, or any other having any spiritual or ecclesiastical living, being seized or possessed of any such barns or buildings, or the site thereof, notwithstanding anything in a certain statute made in the thirteenth year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, for making void fraudulent deeds made by spiritual persons to defraud their successors of remedy for dilapidations, or in any other statute.

“XVI. And be it declared and enacted, that so much of the said acts or any of them as enables any owner of a particular estate in lands or tithes to charge so much of the expenses of the commutation as is defrayed by him, or any part thereof, and the interest thereon, upon the lands whereof the tithes are commuted, or upon the rent-charge to be received by him instead of such tithes respectively, shall in like manner extend and be applicable to and may be made available by any corporate body or person, master or fellows of any college, dean and chapter of any cathedral or collegiate church, master or guardian of any hospital, parson, vicar, or any other having any spiritual or other ecclesiastical living, and whether seized in fee or for a limited estate in such lands, tithes, or rent-charge, anything in the said statute of Queen Elizabeth, or any other restraining statute, or in the tenure by which such lands, tithes, or rent-charge respectively are holden, to the contrary notwithstanding, but so nevertheless that the charge upon such lands or rent-charge respectively shall be lessened in every year following such commutation by one twentieth part at least of the whole original charge thereon.

“XVII. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for any ecclesiastical corporation aggregate, or any collegiate body, with the consent of the said commissioners testified under their hands and seal, to charge with the amount of the expenses of commuting the tithes of any lands of which they are owners, or any part of such expenses, with interest thereon, on any other lands holden by them to the same uses or on the same trusts as the lands in respect of which such expenses were incurred, but so nevertheless that the charge upon such lands shall be lessened in every year following by one twentieth part at the least of the whole original charge thereon.

“XVIII. (1) And be it enacted, that payment of the expenses of or incident to making any apportionment, or any other expenses which the said commissioners are authorized and may have ordered or may order to be paid by any owner of lands under and by virtue of the recited acts, or any of them, or this act, may be enforced by the same ways and means as payment of rent-charge in arrear may be enforced under the provisions of the said acts or either of them.

“XIX. And be it enacted, that so much of the said first-recited act as enables any landowner, either by parochial agreement or individually, to give land instead of tithes or rent-charge at any time before the confirmation of any instrument of apportionment, shall be and the same is hereby extended, and the powers and provisions for that purpose may be exercised in every such case at any time, as well after as before such confirmation of the apportionment as aforesaid, during the continuance of the commission constituted and with the consent of the commissioners appointed and acting under the said first-recited act.

“XX. And be it enacted, that in any case where any land shall have been or shall hereafter be taken by any ecclesiastical titheowner under any agreement for the commutation of any tithes, or for giving land instead of any rent-charge, under the recited acts, or any of them, or this act, such land shall upon the confirmation of such agreement vest absolutely in such titheowner and his successors, free from all claims of any person or body corporate, and without being thereafter subject to any question as to any right, title, or claim thereto, or in any manner affecting the same; and the commissioners shall cause to be inserted in or endorsed upon every such agreement the amount of the rent-charge instead of which such land was given, and the lands upon which the same was chargeable; and every person who if this act had not been made would have been entitled to recover any such land given instead of rent-charge, or any rents or profits issuing out of such land, shall be entitled to recover against the party or parties giving such land instead of tithes or rent-charge, his, her, or their heirs, executors, or administrators, by way of damages, in an action on the case, such compensation as he or she may be entitled to for any loss thereby sustained; and such damages, and all costs and expenses awarded to the plaintiff in such action, shall forthwith attach upon and be payable out of the lands exonerated by such agreement.

“XXI. (1) And be it enacted, that all agreements and other assurances which shall be made for the purpose of effecting the taking of land instead of rent-charge under the provisions of the said recited acts, or any of them, or this act, shall be valid and effectual for the purpose of vesting an estate of inheritance as to such lands in such ecclesiastical titheowner and his successors, notwithstanding the same be made by any corporation sole or aggregate, or any trustees or feoffees for charitable purposes, otherwise restrained from or incapable of making any such valid conveyance or assurance.

“XXII. (2) And be it enacted, that the provisions and conditions of the said secondly-recited act, whereby the said commissioners are enabled to confirm any instrument of voluntary apportionment, although they shall not be satisfied of the accuracy of any map or plan annexed thereto, or that the several quantities of land specified in such apportionment or agreement are therein truly stated, shall extend to enable the commissioners, if they shall think fit, to confirm any compulsory apportionments to which any existing map or plan, agreed to be adopted at a parochial meeting, shall be annexed, although the said commissioners shall not be satisfied of the accuracy of such map or plan, or that the several quantities of land specified in such apportionment are truly stated in such map or plan.

“XXIII. (3) And whereas in and by the said first-recited act the words ‘landowner’ or ‘titheowner,’ or ‘owner of lands’ or ‘owner of tithes,’ are defined to mean and include every person who shall be in the actual possession or receipt of the rents or profits of any lands or tithes, except (amongst other exceptions) any tenant for life or lives, or for years, holding under a lease or agreement for a lease on which a rent of not less than two-thirds of the clear yearly value of the premises therein shall have been reserved, and that without regard to the real amount of interest of such person; and in every case in which any tithes or lands shall have been leased or agreed to be leased to any person for life or lives, or for years by any lease or agreement for a lease on which a rent less than two-thirds of the clear yearly value of the premises comprised therein shall have been reserved, the person in receipt of such rent shall, jointly with the person liable to the payment thereof, be deemed for the purposes of the said act to be the owner of such tithes or lands: and whereas certain allowances and expenses to surveyors and tithe-valuers necessary for making any award, and all other expenses of or incident to making an award, are by the said recited acts or some of them directed to be paid by the landowners and titheowners interested in the said award, in such proportion, time, and manner, as the commissioners or assistant commissioners shall direct; and the expenses of or incident to making any apportionment are by the said first-recited act to be paid by owners of lands in rateable proportions to the sums charged on the said lands in lieu of tithes by such apportionment: and whereas cases have occurred and may occur, where by reason of the rent reserved in certain leases or agreements for leases not being less than two-thirds of the clear yearly value of the premises thereby demised or agreed to be demised at the date or time of coming into operation of such leases or agreements, but which premises are, at the time of putting in force the provisions of the said recited acts, of improved yearly value, so that the rent originally reserved or agreed for is less than two-thirds thereof, but by the operation of the said recited words, as defined in the said first-recited act as aforesaid, such expenses, or a part thereof, would, under the said acts, be chargeable on the original lessor or original lessee, and not on the intermediate or sub-lessors or lessees whose beneficial interest in the said lands and tithes, or rent-charge in lieu of tithes, is proposed to be or has been dealt with under the said recited acts, or some or one of them, or this act: and whereas certain other cases have occurred and may occur in which it is expedient that the commissioners should be empowered to vary and fix the proportion of the expenses of apportionment, including therein the expenses of or incident to the map or plan annexed thereto, and the copies thereof, between the owners of the lands affected thereby, as such owners are defined in the said first-recited act as aforesaid, and according to such principles as to the said commissioners shall seem just and equitable; be it therefore declared and enacted, that, notwithstanding anything in the said acts or any of them contained, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, in such cases as they may deem it just and equitable, to order and direct that such expenses of or incident to any award, or any part thereof, shall be borne and paid in such proportion and manner, by and amongst the persons interested in the lands, tithes, or rent-charge respectively dealt with in such award, and that such expenses of or incident to any apportionment, or any part thereof, shall be borne and paid by and amongst the persons interested in the lands, in such proportions and manner respectively as the said commissioners shall direct; and such expenses, and every or any part thereof, shall in every such case be recoverable in like manner as expenses, or the share thereof to be borne by any person, are or is recoverable under the provisions of the said first-recited act or this act.

Award may be made of rent-charge to certain owners of tithes by general description.

“XXIV.(1) And whereas in certain cases of compulsory award where tithes are held by one titheowner in different rights, or where by reason of owners of land having purchased or otherwise acquired such a beneficial interest in the tithes arising out of the same, for life or lives or for years, as under the said provisions of the said first-recited act requires that such persons respectively should be dealt with and distinguished in such award as joint owners with the lessor of or the person having the reversionary interest in such tithes, but great difficulties have arisen in distinguishing the sums payable to each such titheowner, as also in distinguishing the respective lands out of which the tithes accruing to any such titheowner, either as holding such tithes in different rights or as joint titheowner, arise, or where any several rent-charge should be awarded, and the completion of such award has been thereby impeded; be it therefore declared and enacted, that in any such case it shall not be necessary in any such award to distinguish the lands or award a several rent-charge to each such owner of the tithes by name, or otherwise to distinguish such titheowner, but it shall be sufficient to award a gross rent-charge to such owner of tithes in different rights in respect of such tithes so held by him, or, as the case may be, to the original lessor of such tithes, or the person in whom the ultimate reversion thereof shall be, by his proper name and description, and in any such case of joint ownership to the several persons claiming under him, and being so respectively joint owners of such tithes, by such general terms and description as to the commissioners or assistant commissioner making such award shall seem fit: provided always, that the name of each such titheowner, and the lands out of which his respective tithe, or the portion of such gross rent-charge instead of such tithes, shall respectively accrue or issue, shall be distinguished in the instrument of apportionment made in pursuance of such award; and every such titheowner shall be as fully entitled to take, hold, and recover such portion of the rent-charge as shall be so apportioned in such instrument of apportionment, upon the several lands the tithes or rent-charge whereof are so held by him respectively, according to his respective term and interest in such tithes or the rent-charge, in as ample a manner as if such titheowner and lands had been respectively named and distinguished in such award under the provisions of the said first-recited act.

“XXV. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to adjourn any meeting by notice in writing under their hands or the hands of any two of them, to be affixed and published in manner provided for notices in the said firstly-recited act, without any commissioner or assistant commissioner giving attendance for the purpose of making such adjournment.

“XXVI. And be it enacted, that in case any of the lands in a parish the tithes whereof shall be in course of commutation under the provisions of the said first-recited act shall be orchards or fruit plantations, and notice in writing, under the hands of any of the owners thereof whose interest therein shall not be less than two thirds of the whole of the orchards and fruit plantations in such parish, shall be given to the valuers or commissioners or assistant commissioner by whom any apportionment provided for by the said act shall be made at any time before the draught of such apportionment shall be framed that the tithes thereof should be distinguished into two parts, the amount which shall be charged by any such apportionment upon the several orchards and fruit plantations in such parish shall be distinguished into two parts accordingly, and the same shall be called the ordinary charge and the extraordinary fruit-charge; and the extraordinary charge shall be a rate per imperial acre, and so in proportion for less quantities of ground, according to the discretion of the valuers or commissioners or assistant commissioner by whom such apportionment shall be made as aforesaid.

“XXVII. And be it enacted, that all lands the tithes whereof shall have been commuted under the said act, which shall be situate within the limits of any parish in which an extraordinary fruit-charge shall have been distinguished as aforesaid at the time of commutation, and which shall be newly cultivated as orchards or fruit plantations at any time after such commutation, shall be charged with an additional amount of rent-charge per imperial acre equal to the extraordinary fruit-charge per acre in that parish: provided always, that no such additional amount shall be charged in respect of any plantation of apples, pears, plums, cherries, and filberts, or of any one or more of those fruits, during the first five years, and half only of such additional amount during each of the next succeeding five years, of such new cultivation thereof; and that no such additional amount shall be charged in respect of any plantation of gooseberries, currants, and raspberries, or of any one or more of those fruits, during the first two years, and half only of such additional amount during each of the next succeeding two years, of such new cultivation thereof; and that no such additional amount shall be charged in respect of any mixed plantation of apples, pears, plums, cherries, or filberts, and of gooseberries, currants, or raspberries during the first three years, and half only of such additional amount during each of the next succeeding three years, of such new cultivation thereof.

“XXVIII. And be it enacted, that all lands the tithes whereof shall have been commuted as aforesaid, which shall be situated within the limits of any parish in which an extraordinary fruit-charge shall have been distinguished as aforesaid, and which shall cease to be cultivated as orchards or fruit plantations at any time after such commutation, shall be charged, after the thirty-first day of December next following such charge of cultivation, only with the ordinary charge upon such lands.

“XXIX. Provided also, and be it enacted, that in case any lands within the limits of a parish in which an extraordinary fruit-charge shall have been distinguished as aforesaid shall have been or shall at any time be planted with fruit, and also with hops, the same shall, during the continuance of such mixed plantations of hops and fruit, be liable to the extraordinary hop-charge only, or to the extraordinary fruit-charge only, payable in respect of the same lands, not to both these charges; and that the extraordinary charge to which the lands so planted shall be liable shall be the higher of the two for the time being.

“XXX. And be it enacted, that where any land liable to any such extraordinary charge for the tithes of a mixed plantation of hops and fruit shall at the time of the commutation produce both rectorial and vicarial tithes payable to different persons the apportionment shall set out the same, distinguishing the amount of ordinary and extraordinary charge payable to each titheowner, and shall divide the whole acreable extraordinary charge between such titheowners, according to the quantity of land producing rectorial tithe, and the quantity producing vicarial tithe.

“XXXI. (1) And be it enacted, that in all cases in which there shall be hereafter mixed plantations of hops and of such fruit as aforesaid in any parish or district in which an extraordinary fruit-charge shall have been declared, the rectorial and vicarial tithes whereof but for the commutation would have been payable to different owners, the extraordinary charge payable in respect of the tithes of such mixed plantation shall be divided between such owners in proportion to the extent of land occupied by that produce which would have paid tithes to each of them respectively: provided always, that payment of the share of each titheowner, when so ascertained, shall be taken to be subject to the provisions contained in the said first-recited act and in this act, for lessening the amount of extraordinary charge payable in respect of hop gardens and orchards respectively at the beginning of such cultivation.

“XXXII. (2) And be it enacted, that for the purpose of fixing any charge for the tithes of hops or fruit, or of any mixed plantation as aforesaid, the commissioners may, if they see fit, assign the parish or lands in respect of which the notice shall have been given, requiring the tithes thereof to be separately valued as required by the said first-recited act, or any part or parts of such parish or lands as a district under the provisions of the said act, and may fix a charge upon such lands in respect of the tithes of hops or fruit as the rent-charge to prevail and to be established in respect of the same, without specific reference in the award to any one parish or lands, but having regard nevertheless to the general amount of commutations which they shall find to have prevailed in other parishes of a similar description, and not to the money payments in the parish under consideration, or the value of the tithes in kind therein.

“XXXIII. And be it enacted and declared, that the provisions of the said first-recited act for distinguishing rent-charges apportioned upon lands cultivated as hop grounds into two parts, and for relieving lands from and subjecting the same to an extraordinary charge when ceased to be cultivated, and when newly cultivated as such respectively, shall be held to extend to parochial agreements already or hereafter made, and to the proceedings consequent thereupon, and to the lands discharged from tithes by virtue thereof; and that every such agreement and proceeding, whereby any district has been or shall be assigned for establishing or distinguishing into two parts any rent-charge in respect of lands cultivated as aforesaid, shall be deemed valid, operative, and effectual for all the purposes of the said recited acts and of this act, and that every district assigned by virtue thereof shall be deemed a district duly assigned, and every rent-charge created thereby a valid rent-charge for the like purposes.

“XXXIV. (3) And be it enacted, that in case there shall be any question between any parishes or townships, or between any two or more landowners, touching the boundaries of such parishes or townships, or the lands of such landowners respectively, or if such parishes or townships or landowners shall be desirous of having such boundaries ascertained or a new boundary line defined, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, or any assistant commissioner, on the application in writing of a majority of not less than two thirds in number and value of the landowners of such parishes or townships in the case of parochial or township boundaries, or on the like application of such two or more landowners in the case of boundaries between their lands, to deal with any dispute or question concerning such boundaries, and to ascertain, adjust, set out, and define the ancient boundaries between such parishes or townships or the lands of such landowners respectively, or draw and define a new line of boundary, as they may see fit; and in every such case the powers and provisions of the said recited acts and of this act, so far as the same may, in the judgment of the said commissioners or assistant commissioner respectively, be applicable, shall extend and may be applied by them or him to such question; and the boundary line so ascertained or newly defined by the said commissioners or assistant commissioner shall thenceforward be the boundary line of and between such parishes, townships, or lands of such landowners respectively for all purposes whatsoever: provided always, that nothing in this provision contained shall extend to any boundary or part of a boundary being also the boundary line or part of the boundary line of any county, or to the boundary line of any copyhold or customary land, unless the consent in writing of the lord of the manor whereof such land is holden to such application being dealt with by the said commissioners or assistant commissioner shall have been first sent to them or him for such purpose: provided also, that every such boundary line shall be duly set out and delineated on the map annexed to the schedule of appointment, or upon a separate plan to be attached thereto, with proper descriptions and references, showing in what respects such map so annexed to the apportionment is varied, and in what respect the several closes whereon any rent-charge is fixed are affected thereby; and such map shall in every such case be deemed to be varied by such plan, and be as valid for all purposes as if the same had been originally drawn and sealed or certified by the said commissioners with such variation.

“XXXV. (1) And be it enacted, that in every case in which any judgment or determination of the commissioners or of any assistant commissioner respecting the boundary of any parish, district, or lands shall have been or shall be removed into the court of Queen's Bench, it shall be lawful for the court to direct the trial of one or more feigned issues (2) upon such points as the court shall think fit, and also to

(2) It shall be lawful for the court to direct the trial of one or more feigned issues.—In Regina v. Merson, (3 Q. B. 895,) it was held, that where an award has been made under the Tithe Commutation Acts, Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 69, and Stat. 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, settling the boundary of a parish, and is removed into the court of Queen's Bench by certiorari under sect. 3 of the former act, the court will not, as of course, order a feigned issue under sect. 35 of the latter act, at the instance of a party dissatisfied.

And where, on motion for a feigned issue, the attorney for the applicant stated, that he, the attorney, had examined several documents and witnesses concerning the boundary, and believed, from such examination, that the commissioner had included in parish A. seventy acres of land belonging to parish B., deposing also, that, as he was informed and believed, the applicant, as one of the inhabitants of B., and a large portion of the landowners of B. were desirous of trying by such issue the validity and accuracy of the award, and whether the seventy acres were in A. or B.: it was held, that grounds were not shown on which the court, in its discretion, ought to direct an issue. Lord Denman observing: “In this case a certiorari has been obtained to bring before us the judgment of an assistant tithe commissioner on a question of boundary between parishes. That judgment is delivered after examination on oath, public notice of the proceeding being first given to the parties interested, according to Stat. 7 Gul. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 69, s. 2, it is the result of a solemn inquiry, and is conclusive, unless removed by certiorari under sect. 3. It is now assumed, that in case of such removal, the power exercised by the commissioner may be questioned by any person under almost any circumstances; for Mr. Erle's argument amounts to nothing, unless we are absolutely bound to grant an issue on the application of any person who feels dissatisfied with the judgment of the commissioner. But I think the power given to the commissioner is not so qualified. The act assumes, that he may do justice by his decision; and, unless it be shown to us, that he has done wrong, we ought not to set it aside merely because a party expresses Commissioners may award costs of inquiry into boundaries.

"XXXVI. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners and for such assistant commissioner as aforesaid to order and direct that all reasonable costs, charges, and expenses already or hereafter to be incurred by any parties interested in or about any inquiry into any boundary which the said commissioners or such assistant commissioner are or is authorized to settle, shall be borne and paid in such proportion and manner by and amongst the several other parties interested therein (as well those who shall have signed a request to the title commissioners that the said commissioners should inquire into and settle such boundaries, as every other person interested who shall, either personally, or by his or her counsel, attorney, or agent, appear upon such inquiry before the said commissioners or before such assistant commissioner) as the said commissioners or any such assistant commissioner shall direct; and such costs, charges, and expenses, and every part thereof, shall in every such case be recoverable in the like manner as expenses or the share thereof to be borne by any person are or is recoverable by the recited acts or this act.

This act to be taken as part of 6 & 7 Gul. 4, c. 71.

"XXXVII. And be it enacted, that this act shall be taken to be a part of the first-recited act for the commutation of tithes in England and Wales, and of the secondly-recited act for amending the same, and of the said thirdly-recited act to facilitate the merger of tithes; and that in the construction of this act, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction, the several words used in this act shall have and bear the same interpretation as is given to such words respectively in the said recited acts or either of them; and whenever a word importing the singular number or masculine gender only is used, the same shall be understood to include and shall be applied to several persons or parties as well as one person or party, and females as well as males, and several matters or things as one matter or thing respectively, and the converse.

dissatisfaction with it. This is not like a question of tithe, which lies between two parties, one of whom must necessarily be prejudiced. It may be here, that the boundary is satisfactory to every person in the two parishes except a single individual. The only complaint is, that seventy acres are included in the wrong parish; and how minute an interest is that, to disturb an arrangement affecting so many persons. If we have any discretion, this falls far short of the law which would induce us to interfere. From the affidavit we can collect only that, without inquiry, and without looking at the evidence given before the assistant commissioner, the party making this application believes his decision to be erroneous, a belief for which no reason is given, and none. I think that in granting an order we should do what is arbitrary and wrong.

"An Act further to explain and amend the Acts for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales."

6 & 7 Gal. 4,
c. 71, s. 67.

"Whereas by an act passed in the seventh year of the reign of his late majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales,' it is enacted, that from the first day of January next following the confirmation of any apportionment in any parish under the said act the lands of such parish shall be absolutely discharged from tithes, except as in the said act is provided in certain cases, and instead thereof there shall be payable to the person entitled to such tithes, and in that behalf mentioned in the said apportionment, a sum of money in the nature of a rent-charge issuing out of the lands charged therewith; and by an act passed in the first year of the reign of her present majesty, intituled, 'An Act to amend an Act for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales,' provision is made for the lands in a parish being discharged from tithes (except as in the said first-recited act is excepted) by agreement between the parties to any parochial agreement or supplemental agreement, from certain days preceding or following the confirmation of the apportionment, instead of the said first day of January next following such confirmation, but so that the first payment of the rent-charge be made and recoverable at the expiration of six calendar months from the time from which such lands are discharged from the payment of tithes; and by an act passed in the last session of parliament the commissioners appointed under the said first-recited act are enabled by their award, and the landowners and titheowners by supplemental agreement, in like manner to fix the period at which any rent-charge shall commence; and whereas, after an agreement for or award of rent-charge has been made and confirmed by the said commissioners, much delay is often occasioned in settling and adjusting the apportionment before the same can be confirmed by the commissioners; and, to avoid the loss of the proportion of tithes or composition for the period intervening between the expiration of any former agreement or composition and the commencement of such rent-charge, the titheowner is compelled to have recourse to taking tithes in kind, or to a suit in equity; and in other cases, by reason of the lands so remaining subject to tithes, or composition for tithes, during such period, such tithes continue to be taken in kind, or may be so taken on the determination of any composition existing at the date of such agreement or award, notwithstanding that the parties have agreed for, or the commissioners awarded, the sum which under the provisions of the said acts ought to be taken as the permanent rent-charge payable instead of such tithes; and great hardship is thereby occasioned, contrary to the spirit and intent of the said acts: and whereas it is expedient to make provision for remedy thereof, and otherwise to explain and amend the said recited acts, in manner hereinafter mentioned: be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that in every case where an annual sum by way of rent-charge shall have been fixed in any parish, instead of the tithes of such parish, either by agreement or award, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, by a declaration in writing under their hands and seal of office, or the hands of any two of them, at any period after the confirmation of any such agreement or award respectively, and before the confirmation of the apportionment to be made in respect of the rent-charge so fixed, upon the application in writing of any landowner or occupier, and upon such security being given to the said commissioners as they shall in their discretion think sufficient for the due payment to the parties entitled thereto of such rent-charge from the day to be fixed in such declaration, to declare that the lands in such parish shall be discharged from the liability to payment or render of tithes, or composition or rent in the nature thereof instead of tithes, and that instead thereof the annual payment or rent-charge so fixed by any such award or agreement respectively shall be paid to the person entitled to the same by half-yearly payments, commencing and calculating from such day of discharge named in such declaration as aforesaid; provided always, that the day to be fixed in such declaration of the said commissioners as aforesaid shall, in every case in which any agreement for a composition or rent in the nature thereof instead of tithes shall be in force at the time of making such application to them as aforesaid, be the day on which such composition or rent shall determine, and in every other case shall be either the first day of January, the first day of April, the

Provided also, and be it enacted, that nothing in this act shall extend or be construed to extend to annul or make void any lease or leases of tithes granted before the twenty-fifth day of March and which shall end or determine on or before the first day of January next; and that in any parish or place where such lease or leases shall have been granted as aforesaid, no tithepayer shall be at liberty to make the application hereby authorized to be made, until after the expiration of such lease or leases respectively, except in respect of lands the tithes whereof are not included in such lease.

"IV. And be it enacted, that if any owner of lands so discharged from such liability shall be desirous of paying in exoneration of such security, the proportion of rent-charge to which the whole of such lands, whether in his own occupation or in the occupation of any tenant, shall be liable, it shall be lawful for such owner to apply in writing to the valuer or valuers appointed to apportion such rent-charge, at any time after they shall have subscribed the declaration required in that behalf in the said first-recited act, and before the confirmation of the apportionment, and to demand of such valuer or valuers a statement of the probable amount of such proportion, and such valuer or valuers shall and he or they is or are hereby required to furnish the same accordingly, and shall distinguish therein the probable amount to which the whole of the lands in the occupation of any tenant under such owner would be liable; and on receipt thereof such owner may cause a copy of such statement or an extract of such parts thereof as shall relate to the lands in the occupation of any tenant who, but for such declaration of discharge, would be liable to the render or payment of tithe in respect of such lands, to be served on such tenant by leaving the same at his usual place of abode, with an undertaking subscribed thereto by such owner to pay the amount set forth in such statement in aid or exoneration of such security; and in every such case such tenant shall thenceforward be liable to pay to such owner, by way of additional rent, such estimated proportion at the half-yearly days of payment fixed in the award or agreement for payment of rent-charge; and such owner shall be entitled to demand and recover the same as rent by all the usual remedies for recovery of rent in arrear, until the half yearly payment falling due next after the confirmation of the apportionment; provided always, that it shall be lawful for any such landowner or tenant, at any time within six months after the date of such confirmation, to apply to the said commissioners to take an account of the amount paid by any such tenant, and certify the amount of the difference, if any, between the amount so paid and the amount of rent-charge calculated as finally apportioned on such lands for the same period as such estimated amount has been paid, and if the rent-charge finally apportioned shall be greater than the amount so paid, it shall be lawful for such owner to demand and recover the difference accordingly; but if such tenant shall have paid more than the amount of such rent-charge, then it shall be lawful for such tenant, or (in case of his death) for his executors or administrators, to deduct the excess so verified as aforesaid from the next payment of rent accruing after the date of such certificate; provided also, that in the event of the expiration or other sooner determination of the period of tenancy before the confirmation of the appointment, such excess shall be deemed a debt due to the tenant, his executors or administrators, and shall be recoverable in an action of debt to be brought against such landowner as aforesaid, or his personal representatives.

And be it enacted, that in every such case the production of such certificate as aforesaid, or of an office copy thereof sealed or stamped with the seal of the said commissioners, shall be sufficient evidence of the right to recover or retain the amount or excess in payment which shall appear by such certificate to have been made by the landowner or his tenant respectively.

Certificate of commissioners to be evidence of right of recovery of retainer.

“VI. (1) And whereas it may happen that a tenant, being an occupier of lands, who shall, by virtue of the provisions of the said first-recited act, be entitled to deduct the amount of any rent-charge from the rent payable by him to his landlord, may be desirous of paying, in exoneration of such security as aforesaid, the proportion of rent-charge to which the lands in his occupation shall be liable; be it enacted, that, upon the application in writing of any such tenant, the valuer or valuers shall, in like manner as aforesaid, furnish to such tenant a statement of the probable amount of such proportion of rent-charge as aforesaid, and on receipt thereof the tenant may cause a copy of such statement to be served on his landlord by leaving the same at his usual place of abode, accompanied by a written notice of his intention to undertake the payment of such proportion of rent-charge as aforesaid; and in case the landowner shall not, within twenty-one days after the service of such copy and notice, undertake, by some writing subscribed by him or his agent lawfully authorized, and served in like manner as aforesaid upon the tenant, to pay the amount set forth in such statement, it shall be lawful for the tenant to undertake the payment thereof, and from time to time to deduct the amount paid by him from his rent until the period at which the half-yearly payment of rent-charge to be made next after the confirmation of the apportionment shall have become due; provided always, that in every such case the provisions hereinafter contained for taking accounts between the person who shall have given such security as aforesaid and the owners of lands subject to the rent-charge shall be applicable to the case of every such landowner from whose rental such deductions shall have been made as aforesaid.

“VII. And be it enacted, that in every such case, if the person liable under such security shall not make due payment to the person entitled to the same according to the tenor of such security, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners from time to time, as and when any half-yearly payment of such rent-charge shall accrue, and the same or any part thereof shall remain unpaid for the space of twenty-one days from any day fixed for payment thereof, and notwithstanding execution shall have been previously issued in respect of any former arrears, to sue for and recover any such half-yearly payment, or so much thereof as shall from time to time remain unpaid in respect thereof, against the person liable under such security, by taking out a summons, returnable before a judge of any of the superior courts of common law, to compute what is due in respect of such rent-charge; and it shall be lawful for any judge of such courts, on hearing the parties, or such of them as shall appear, and on production of such security, and proof by affidavit of the amount so due as aforesaid, and of the service of such summons on such person or on any occupier of any of the lands of such person in any such parish, by delivery of the same personally, or by leaving the same at his place of abode, to order that it be referred to the masters of the court to compute what is due in respect of such security, and to tax the costs of such application, and all such orders shall “VIII. And be it enacted, that in every such case the said commissioners shall make due inquiry as to any payment of rent-charge made by any such person in respect of such security previous to the confirmation of the apportionment of such rent-charge, and shall indorse on such apportionment a certificate of such payment, and that the parties entitled to such rent-charge have been duly paid the amount thereof according to the tenor of such security; and such person shall thereupon, after the confirmation of such apportionment, be entitled to recover the amount specified in such certificate as having been paid by him, against the lands of the said parish subject to such rent-charge, in the proportions fixed for payment of rent-charge by such apportionment, by distress and entry on such lands respectively, and shall have the like remedies or modes of recovery as are given to owners of rent-charge for recovery thereof in the said recited acts or any of them: provided always, that if the owner or occupier of any such lands shall have contributed to the payment of such rent-charge, or of any part thereof, or of the arrears thereof, under such security, or in exoneration thereof, it shall be lawful for him to take out a summons, returnable before any judge as aforesaid, to stay any proceedings taken by the person liable under such security as aforesaid, for the purpose of taking an account of what he shall have so contributed or paid in respect of such rent-charge or arrears; and it shall be lawful for any judge as aforesaid to refer it to the masters of the court to take such account and make all just allowances between the parties; and if, on taking such account, such owner or occupier shall be found to have paid his due proportion, or any amount exceeding the same, according to the proportionate amount of rent-charge fixed on such lands, then it shall be lawful for any judge as aforesaid to stay proceedings, and order payment, by the person liable under such security, of the amount, if any, so overpaid by such owner or occupier, as the case may require, and every such order shall have the effect of a judgment as aforesaid; but if on taking such account the whole or any balance shall be found due from such owner or occupier, then it shall be lawful for such judge to allow the same against such owner or occupier, whose lands shall thereupon be liable to the repayment thereof, to the person liable under such security, and who shall be entitled to the said remedies in respect thereof accordingly; and the cost of every such proceeding shall be in the discretion of the judge hearing the same, and shall be added to the amount found due on such order, if he shall see fit so to direct: provided also, that no such security shall be available by the person liable under the same against any such lands for more than two years' payment or arrear of such rent-charge, unless the said commissioners shall, previous to the expiration of two years from the date of such security, have enlarged the operation thereof for any period not exceeding twelve months, by indorsement thereon, under their hands or the hands of any two of them, and which they are hereby authorized to do if they shall so think fit.

“IX. And be it enacted, that if such security shall be insufficient to meet the full amount of payments which shall accrue due in respect thereof, or the person liable under the same shall fail to make good the amount due thereon by the space of twenty-one days next after the date of the confirmation of the apportionment of such rent-charge, it shall be lawful for the person entitled to the benefit thereof to recover the same against the lands of the said parish subject to such rent-charge, in the proportions fixed in such apportionment, by the said remedies or modes of recovery given by the said recited acts, or either of them, in respect of rent-charge fixed under any confirmed apportionment, in like manner as if the amount so due and in arrear had accrued subsequent to the confirmation.

“X. And be it enacted, that every security taken by the said commissioners, by virtue of the provisions of this act, and every assignment thereof, shall be free of stamp duty.

“XI.(1) And whereas by the lastly-recited act the said commissioners are empowered, by any award, or by a supplemental award, after a parochial agreement, in certain cases, and under certain provisions, to fix the sum to be paid in consideration of the time, if any, which may intervene between the termination of any previous agreement or composition for tithes and the time at which any such rent-charge shall commence; and it is expedient to extend such power in manner hereinafter mentioned; be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, at any time before the confirmation of the apportionment of any rent-charge, to exercise the said powers so given to them for fixing the sum to be paid for such intervening time as aforesaid, by a supplemental award after an award.

And be it enacted, that when any such sum shall be fixed to be paid in consideration of such intervening time as aforesaid, either by parochial agreement or supplemental agreement, or by award or supplemental award, the parties by and to whom such sum is to be paid, and the lands in respect of which the same shall be payable, as also the proportionate amount to be paid by each party, shall be specified and set forth in the instrument fixing such sum, or in the instrument of apportionment to be made in pursuance thereof; and in default thereof such sum shall be payable by and to the parties and in the proportions fixed in such apportionment in respect of the rent-charge therein provided for.

“XIII. And whereas by the said lastly-recited act the said commissioners are enabled by their award, and the titheowners and landowners by a parochial agreement after an award, are enabled to fix the period at which the rent-charge shall commence, and it is expedient to extend such power in manner hereinafter mentioned; be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the commissioners, by supplemental award, to exercise the powers so given to them for fixing the period at which any rent-charge shall commence, as well after an award as after a parochial agreement, where the same shall not have been previously fixed by any such award or agreement, or by any supplemental award or agreement, under the said recited acts, or either of them, or this act: provided always, that where the said commissioners shall not have fixed that the period at which any rent-charge shall commence shall be the first day of January next following the confirmation of the apportionment, such period shall be fixed by them on the first day of January preceeding such confirmation, or on the first day of April, the first day of July, or the first day of October preceeding or following such confirmation, whichever of such days may happen nearest to the termination of any previous agreement or composition, or of any customary year of tithing in the parish or district to which such rent-charge shall relate: provided also, that when any period of commencement shall have been so fixed by the said commissioners in any award or supplemental award, or any day preceeding the date thereof, the commissioners shall cause due inquiry to be made as to the value of any tithes rendered in kind, and the amount of any payment in respect of tithe which shall have been made, subsequent to such period of commencement, and prior to the first day fixed for payment of such rent-charge, and shall take into account and allow such value or amount to be deducted from such payment accordingly.

it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, with such consent of both landowners and titheowners as in the said lastly-recited act is required in that respect, at any time before the confirmation of the apportionment of any rent-charge, by any award, or by a supplemental award, where an award or parochial agreement has been made before the passing of this act, or for the landowners or titheowners by a parochial agreement, or supplemental agreement where a parochial agreement or award has already been made in respect of such lands, to exercise such powers, in such manner and subject to the same conditions as are given by the said lastly-recited act in cases of lands formerly part of the possessions of a privileged order: provided always, and it is hereby declared, that nothing herein contained extends to cases of change of cultivation only, nor to cases of prescription relating to woodland.

“XIX. And be it enacted, that it shall not be necessary to distinguish in any apportionment the amount of extraordinary rent-charge to be charged upon the lands of each individual landowner which shall be cultivated as hop-grounds, market gardens, orchards, fruit plantations, or mixed plantations of hops and fruit, provided that the acreable amount of extraordinary charge for all the lands so cultivated respectively in any district which shall have been assigned, or in any parish wherein any extraordinary rent-charge shall have been declared, previous to the confirmation of the instrument of apportionment, shall be inserted therein.

And be it declared and enacted, that every half-yearly payment of rent-charge under the said recited acts or either of them, or this act, shall from time to time be regulated by the averages published under the provisions of the said first-recited act in the month of January next preceding every such half-yearly day of payment.

“XXI. (1) And be it enacted, that, unless a majority in value of the owners of lands included in any apportionment shall, by writing under their hands, request the commissioners to omit the same, the instrument of apportionment shall distinguish the amount or portion of rent-charge payable in respect of the several closes of the said lands, and such closes shall be laid down in the map or plan annexed to such apportionment: provided always, that nothing in this provision contained shall apply to any instrument of apportionment the valuers for effecting which shall have been appointed previous to the passing of this act; and no such last-mentioned instrument of apportionment shall be deemed invalid if made in conformity with the instructions given to the valuers for making the same, although the amount of rent-charge payable in respect of the several closes of land shall not have been distinguished therein, nor such closes laid down in the map or plan annexed thereto.

“XXII. (2) And be it enacted, that every occupier whose lands or goods shall be liable to distress in respect of any expenses chargeable under the said recited acts, or either of them, or this act, against any landlord or lessor of the lands in his occupation, shall be entitled to recover the amount of any such expenses which he shall pay, with interest on such payment from time to time at four per centum per annum, and may deduct the same from any rent or renewal fines payable to such landlord or lessor; and where the estate of such landlord or lessor in the lands in respect whereof such payment shall have been made shall be less than an immediate estate of fee simple or fee tail, or subject by settlement to any uses or trusts, he shall be entitled to charge such amount and interest upon such estate in like manner and subject to the same restrictions and provisions as are contained in the said recited acts or any of them in relation to owners of particular estates, or of estates settled to the same uses and trusts as the lands in respect of which such expenses have been incurred respectively.

“XXIII. (3) And be it enacted, that every person, as defined in the said first-recited act, who is empowered under the said recited acts or any of them, or this act, to charge upon his lands or rent-charge any expenses of commutation payable by him, may exercise such powers, in the case of expenses incurred, as well in respect of the commutation of tithes payable to him as the owner thereof as of tithes to which any lands whereof he is owner are liable; and the word ‘lands’ shall, in the construction of the said acts and of this act, be construed to extend to “XXIV.(1) And be it enacted, that notwithstanding anything in either of the said acts contained, in all cases where under the said recited acts or any of them the said commissioners or any assistant commissioner may examine persons upon oath, and cause to be produced before them or him all books and other documents, as therein mentioned, relating to the commutation of tithes, the said commissioners or assistant commissioner may, by summons under their or his hand, require the attendance of and examine any party interested in the lands or tithes of any parish, or any other person, and require the production also of all deeds and documents in the custody or power of either party, and allow such portions only of them to be read as in their or his judgment shall be thought proper; and also that in all cases where under the said acts parties in a feigned issue are required to produce to each other, and their respective attorneys or counsel, at such time and place as any judge may order before trial, and also to the court and jury upon the trial of such issue, all deeds, books, and other documents, as in the said act mentioned, relating to the matters in issue in their respective custody or power, the parties shall be obliged to produce only such documents, and such portions of them only shall be inspected or read, as the judge shall think proper, who may order the parties to discover the documents in their possession, upon oath, if he shall think fit; and it shall be lawful for the judge, and also for the commissioners or assistant commissioner, in the cases aforesaid respectively, to direct copies or extracts to be taken or furnished of the same documents, at the expense of the person requiring the same, at the rate of sixpence for every common law folio: provided always, that in no case shall any person be compellable to produce any part of the deeds or documents in his possession which relate to the title to the property therein referred to, but only such parts thereof as relate to the matter immediately in issue; and such person may, if he see fit, withhold any such deeds or documents, or any portion thereof, on making an oath that the deeds or documents or parts thereof so withheld do not relate to the matter so in issue as aforesaid.

“XXV.(2) And whereas in many cases titheowners have, during the seven years of average prescribed by the said first-recited act, forborne to take the tithes of lands used and occupied as gardens, lawns, or the like, or compositions in lieu thereof, on account of such lands being of small extent, and the tithes thereof being of inconsiderable value: be it enacted, that where in such cases the tithes of a parish or district have been commuted, whether by a parochial agreement or by a compulsory award, and it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the said commissioners that the rent-charge or rent-charges specified in the said agreement or award has or have been based upon the average value of the tithes of the said parish or district during the said seven years of average, exclusive of any tithes in respect of such gardens, lawns, or such like small holdings, according to the provisions of the said first-recited act, and that no part of the said rent-charge or rent-charges has been agreed to be given or awarded in respect of the tithes of such gardens, lawns, or other such like small holdings, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, if they think fit, to order and direct that no part of the said rent-charge or rent-charges shall be apportioned upon such gardens, lawns, or other such like small holdings.

“XXVI.(3) And whereas it hath happened that in cases where, during the seven years of average prescribed by the said first-recited act, tithes shall not have been demanded of certain tenements, by reason of their small extent or of the small amount of such tithes, such tenements have notwithstanding been included in the apportionment of the rent-charge for the parish, whereby the occupiers of such tenements have become liable to have their goods distrained upon, and the titheowner has been subjected to much increased difficulty and expense in the collection of the rent-charge, contrary to the true intent and meaning of the said first-recited act; and it is therefore expedient, under certain restrictions, to give relief in such cases; be it enacted, that in any such case in which the apportionment shall have included any number of small tenements, exceeding in the whole one hundred, from which tenements no tithe or composition for tithe shall have been demanded or taken (notwithstanding their liability thereto) during the period of seven years next preceding Christmas in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, and they are hereby authorized, if they shall see fit, upon the application in writing of any ten or more of the owners or occupiers of such small tenements, or of the titheowner, and after satisfactory proof shall have been given that no part of the rent-charge has been agreed to be given or awarded in respect of the tithes of such small tenements, to cause a new apportionment to be made of the said rent-charge, and to order and direct that no part thereof shall be apportioned upon such small tenements; and the provisions in the said first-recited act contained for hearing and determining objections to apportionments, and for rendering the same, or any map or plan therein referred to, final and conclusive, shall be and are hereby respectively made applicable to every such new apportionment; and, subject to such provisions, such new apportionment shall commence and take effect from the half-yearly day of payment of the said rent-charge which shall happen next before the confirmation of the same apportionment: provided always, that no payment of such rent-charge, or right to arrears thereof, which shall have become due or accrued on or before the said half-yearly day of payment, nor any remedy in case of nonpayment, shall in anywise be affected by any such new apportionment.

“XXVII. And be it enacted, that the costs of attending every such new apportionment shall be paid and borne by the parties making such application, in such proportions as the commissioners shall direct, and shall be recoverable in like manner as the costs of any apportionment under the said first-recited act; and as to any part of such costs as may be borne by the titheowner, such titheowner, being an ecclesiastical beneficed person, may charge or assign the rent-charge as a security for the repayment of such costs in like manner as for the costs of the commutation under the said act.

“XXVIII. (1) And whereas by the said lastly-recited act powers are given to the said commissioners or any assistant commissioner, upon the application in writing of not less than two-thirds in number and value of the landowners in any parishes or townships, to set out and define the boundaries of such parishes or townships in manner in the said act provided; and it is expedient to extend such power in manner hereinafter mentioned; be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, or assistant commissioner, but at the sole discretion of the said commissioners, and only in such manner as they shall see fit and proper, to exercise all and every the powers so given by the said lastly-recited act relating to boundaries of parishes or townships, on the application in writing of two-thirds in number and value of the landowners of any one parish, place, or township whose boundary shall be in question, notwithstanding the landowners in the parish, place, or township adjoining such boundary shall not join in such requisition: provided always, that in every such case the said commissioners or assistant commissioner shall, twenty-one days at least before proceeding to make inquiry and adjudicate on such question of boundary, cause a notice to be sent by the post, or otherwise given, addressed to the churchwardens and overseers, and also to the surveyors of the highways of every parish, place, or township adjoining such boundary, of the intention of the said commissioners or assistant commissioner to proceed on the question of such boundary, and shall specify in such notice a time and place of meeting so to proceed therein, and shall annex to each copy of such notice a copy of the application of the landowners requiring the commissioners to Letters patent, 3rd November, 3 Anne, incorporating the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne.

“Whereas by letters patent of her majesty Queen Anne, under the great seal of England, bearing date the third day of November, in the third year of her reign, incorporating ‘The Governors of the Bounty of Queen Anne for the Augmentation of the Maintenance of the Poor Clergy,’ the said governors were authorised to consider, consult, advise, agree upon, draw up, prepare, and propose in writing to her said majesty, her heirs and successors, such proper and necessary rules, methods, directions, orders, and constitutions as the said governors, or any seven or more of them, with such quorum as is therein directed, should in their discretion judge most convenient to be observed for and towards the better rule and government of the said corporation and the members thereof, and the receiving, accounting for, and managing all and every the revenues thereby granted, and all arrears thereof and also for and concerning the distributing, paying, and disposing of the same, and all other gifts and benevolences that should or might be given or bequeathed to the said corporation for the charitable ends in the said letters patent mentioned for the augmentation of the maintenance of the poor clergy aforesaid, and that such rules, methods, orders, directions, and constitutions as should be so proposed, and should be approved, altered, or amended by her said majesty, her heirs or successors, and such as should be made by her said majesty, her heirs or successors, and so signified and declared by her, her heirs or successors, under her or their great seal, her said majesty thereby willed should be the rules, methods, directions, orders, and constitutions by which the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne for the augmentation of the maintenance of the poor clergy, and their successors, should receive, manage, govern, apply, and dispose her said majesty's royal bounty, and other gifts and benevolences which should or might after that time be given or bequeathed to the said corporation, (where the donors thereof should not particularly direct the application thereof,) to and for the increase of the maintenance of such parsons, vicars, curates, and ministers officiating in any church or chapel within the kingdom of England, dominion of Wales, or town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, where the liturgy and rites of the church of England, as then by law established, were and should be used and observed, for whom a maintenance was not then sufficiently provided: and whereas, pursuant to the said letters patent of incorporation, the said governors did agree upon, prepare, and propose to her said majesty certain rules and constitutions, for the better rule and government of the said corporation, the fourth of which said rules and constitutions was to the effect following; (that is to say,) that in order to encourage benefactions from others, and thereby the sooner to complete the good that was intended by her said majesty's bounty, the governors might give the sum of two hundred pounds (which was the stated sum to be allowed to each cure) to cures not exceeding thirty-five pounds per annum, where any persons would give the same or greater sum or value in lands or tithes; and her said majesty, by letters patent under her great seal, bearing date the fifth day of March, in the twelfth year of her reign, did establish the said rules and constitutions, reserving to herself, her heirs and successors, power from time to time, under her or their great seal, to alter the same, and to give and make in like manner such other rules and constitutions, according to the true intent of the said letters patent of incorporation, as to her said majesty, her heirs or successors, should seem meet: and whereas by an act passed in the first year of the reign of his majesty King George the First, intituled, 'An Act for making more effectual Her late Majesty's gracious Intentions for augmenting the Maintenance of the Poor Clergy,' after reciting (amongst other things) the said several letters patent of her said majesty, it was enacted and declared, that all such rules, methods, orders, directions, and constitutions as should from time to time be by the said governors agreed upon, prepared, and proposed to his said majesty, his heirs and successors, according to the true intention of the said letters patent of incorporation, and by his said majesty, his heirs and successors, approved under his or their sign manual, should be as good, valid, and effectual rules, methods, directions, orders, and constitutions for the purposes aforesaid as if the same were made and established under the great seal of his said majesty, his heirs or successors; and by the same act, after reciting the said fourth rule or constitution established by the said letters patent of the fifth day of March, in the twelfth year of her said majesty's reign, and that the right of presentation or nomination to small livings was of inconsiderable value, and yet it might be a great inducement to such benefactions as aforesaid if the benefactor might have some right of presentation or nomination to the cure which himself contributed to augment, it was therefore further enacted, that all agreements with such benefactor and benefactors, with the consent and approbation of the said governors, touching the patronage or right of presentation or nomination to any such augmented cure made or to be made for the benefit of such benefactor and benefactors, his, her, or their heirs or successors, by the king's most excellent majesty, his heirs and successors, under his and their sign manual, or by any bodies politic or corporate, or by any person or all appropriations heretofore made by the said governors of any sum or sums of money out of the monies at their disposal to the augmentation of any cure shall be good, valid, and effectual, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, in all cases in which any benefactor or benefactors has or have, in order to obtain any such appropriation for the augmentation of the same cure, contributed not less than the amount of benefaction which was at the time of any such augmentation required in that behalf by the rules, orders, and constitutions then in force, notwithstanding that the sum or sums so appropriated by the said governors to the augmentation of such cure shall have exceeded in any one year the sum of two hundred pounds.

“II. And be it further enacted, that all agreements already made and hereafter to be made, with such consent and approbation of the patron and ordinary as required by the said recited act, and with the consent and approbation of the said governors, with any benefactor or benefactors contributing to the augmentation of any cure, touching the patronage or right of presentation or nomination to such augmented cure, for the benefit of such benefactor or benefactors, his, her, or their heirs or successors, according to the provisions of the said recited act, and all grants and assurances made and to be made for carrying such agreements into effect, shall be good, valid, and effectual in the law, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, in all cases in which the yearly value of the augmented cure shall have been or shall be within the limits prescribed for the same by the rules, orders, and constitutions which shall have been or shall be in force at the time of making such agreements respectively as aforesaid, notwithstanding that such yearly value shall have exceeded or shall exceed the sum of thirty-five pounds, or that the amount appropriated by the said governors out of the monies at their disposal to the augmentation of such cure shall have exceeded or shall exceed in any one year the sum of two hundred pounds, or that such yearly value and also the amount so appropriated shall both have exceeded or shall both exceed the same several sums respectively; provided nevertheless, that so far as relates to such agreements as aforesaid the amount of all appropriations hereafter to be made by the said governors to the augmentation of any cure shall be within the limits prescribed for the same by the rules, orders, and constitutions which shall be in force at the time of making such agreements respectively as aforesaid.

“III. And whereas it is expedient to extend the provisions of the said recited act, with respect to such agreements as aforesaid, to cases in which no appropriation shall be made by the said governors out of the funds at their disposal to the augmentation of the cures to which such agreements shall respectively relate; be it therefore further enacted, that all agreements hereafter to be made, with such consent and approbation of the patron and ordinary, as required by the said recited act, and with the consent and approbation of the said governors, with any benefactor or benefactors contributing to or providing for the augmentation of any cure, touching the patronage or right of presentation or nomination to such cure, for the benefit of such benefactor or benefactors, his, her, or their heirs or successors, according to the provisions of the said recited act, and all grants and assurances to be made for carrying such agreements into effect, shall be good, valid, and effectual in the law, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, in all cases in which the yearly value of such cure shall be within the limits prescribed for the same by the rules, orders, and constitutions which at the time of making such agreements respectively as aforesaid shall be in force with respect to cures for the augmentation of which appropriations to meet benefactions may be made by the said governors out of the funds at their disposal, notwithstanding that in any of such cases no appropriation whatsoever shall be made by the said governors out of the funds at their disposal to the augmentation of the cure to which such agreements as aforesaid shall respectively relate.

“IV. And be it further enacted, that every cure touching the patronage or right of nomination to which any such agreement as aforesaid with any benefactor or benefactors shall be made for the benefit of such benefactor or benefactors, his, her, or their heirs or successors, though no appropriation whatsoever to the said cure for the augmentation thereof shall be made by the said governors out of the “II. Provided always, and be it enacted, that no such written permission or renewed permission shall be granted unless the party applying for the same shall first produce to the bishop of the diocese letters commendatory given within six months before the production thereof, in the case of a bishop under the hand and seal of two other bishops of the church to which he belongs, and in the case of a priest under the hand and seal of the bishop exercising episcopal functions within the district or place in which such priest usually officiates, and also a testimonial given within six months before the production thereof, under the hand and seal of such last-mentioned bishops or bishop, that the party applying is a person of honest life and godly conversation, and professeth the doctrines of the united church of England and Ireland.

“III. And whereas another act was passed in the twenty-sixth year of the reign of his said late majesty, intituled, ‘An Act to empower the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Archbishop of York for the time being, to consecrate to the Office of a Bishop Persons being Subjects or Citizens of Countries out of Her Majesty’s Dominions:’ and whereas it is expedient to alter and amend the said act, and to enable the bishops and priests of the protestant episcopal church in the United States of America to officiate in England and Ireland, under restrictions and limitations similar to those hereinbefore enacted and provided with respect to the bishops and priests of the protestant episcopal church in Scotland; be it therefore enacted, that all the several provisions hereinbefore contained with respect to the bishops and priests canonically ordained of the protestant episcopal church in Scotland, shall respectively extend to the bishops of the protestant episcopal church in the United States of America, and to the priests canonically ordained by a bishop of such church residing and exercising at the time of such ordination episcopal functions within some district or place in the United States of America.

“V. And be it enacted, that if any bishop or priest of the protestant episcopal church in Scotland or in the United States of America shall, save as hereinbefore mentioned, or if any deacon of either of such churches shall, officiate, contrary to the provisions of the said recited acts, in any church or chapel in England or Ireland where the Liturgy of the said united church is used, or if any bishop, priest, or deacon, not being a bishop, priest, or deacon of the united church of England or Ireland, or of any of her majesty’s foreign possessions, or of the protestant episcopal church in Scotland or in the United States of America, shall officiate in any such church or chapel, he shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of fifty pounds to the governors of Queen Anne’s bounty, to be recovered, by action of debt brought in the name of the treasurer of the said bounty in any of her majesty’s courts of Record at Westminster, or in the courts of Session in Scotland at the suit of the public prosecutor.

“VI. And be it enacted, that no person who has been or shall be ordained a deacon by any protestant bishop other than an archbishop or bishop of the united church of England and Ireland, and who shall after the passing of this act be ordained a priest by any archbishop or bishop of the united church of England and Ireland, shall be thereby enabled, save as in this act is provided, to exercise his office within England or Ireland.

“VII. And be it further enacted, that all admissions, institutions, and inductions to benefices in the church of England or church of Ireland, and all appointments to act as curates therein, which shall be made contrary to the provisions of this act, shall be to all intents and purposes null and void; provided always, that nothing herein shall be construed to affect any admission, institution, or induction to any benefice or any appointment as curate which shall have been made previous to the passing of this act.

"An Act to provide for the Administration of the Government in case the Crown should descend to any Issue of Her Majesty whilst such Issue shall be under the Age of Eighteen Years, and for the Care and Guardianship of such Issue."

"Whereas your majesty, by your majesty's royal message to both houses of parliament, has been pleased to state that the uncertainty of human life, and the deep sense your majesty feels of duty to your people, rendered it incumbent upon your majesty to recommend to both houses of parliament to consider contingencies which may hereafter take place, and to make such provision as will, in any event, secure the exercise of the royal authority; and that your majesty would be prepared to concur with the two houses of parliament in those measures which may appear best calculated to maintain unimpaired the power and dignity of the crown, and thereby to strengthen the securities which protect the rights and liberties of your people; and whereas, with the most cordial sense of duty and gratitude to your majesty for the tender concern and regard so uniformly and now more especially demonstrated for the happiness of your people and the security of their rights and liberties, we have taken this most important business into our consideration, and being thoroughly convinced of the wisdom and expediency of what your majesty has thought fit to recommend, we are firmly and zealously determined to contribute everything in our power to maintain unimpaired the power and dignity of the crown, and to strengthen the securities which protect the rights and liberties of the people; we therefore, your majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in parliament assembled, do most humbly beseech your majesty that it may be enacted; and be it enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that if at the demise of her present majesty, (whom God long preserve,) there shall be issue of her said majesty who shall become and be king or queen of this realm whilst under the age of eighteen years, his royal highness Prince Albert, the consort of her said majesty, shall be the guardian, and shall have the care, tuition, and education of such issue, until such issue shall attain the age of eighteen years, and shall till such age have the disposition, ordering, and management of all matters and things relating thereto; and his said royal highness Prince Albert shall, until such issue of her said majesty shall attain the age of eighteen years, and no longer, have full power and authority, in the name of such issue, and in his or her stead, and under the style and title of Regent of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, to exercise and administer, according to the laws and constitution thereof, the royal power and government of “II. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that all acts of royal power, prerogative, government, and administration of government, of what nature or kind soever, which shall be done or executed during the regency established by this act otherwise than by and with the consent and authority of the said regent, in the manner and according to the direction of this act set forth and prescribed, shall be absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the regent, before he shall act or enter upon his said office of regent, shall take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy in the form prescribed and required by an act passed in the first year of the reign of King William and Queen Mary, intituled, ‘An Act for abrogating the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and appointing other Oaths;’ and shall also take the oath of abjuration in such manner and form as is set down and prescribed in an act passed in the sixth year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled, ‘An Act for altering the Oath of Abjuration and the Assurance, and for amending so much of an Act of the seventh year of Her late Majesty Queen Anne, intituled, “An Act for the Improvement of the Union of the Two Kingdoms,” as after the Time herein limited requires the Delivery of certain Lists and Copies therein mentioned to Persons indicted of High Treason or Misprision of Treason;’ as also the following oath; that is to say,

“VI. And whereas by the said recited act passed in the fifty-eighth year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third it is provided, that by an order in council, upon the representation of the said commissioners made with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, the boundaries of a distinct and separate parish, or of a district parish, formed under the said act, may be altered within five years after a description of such boundaries has been enrolled in the high court of Chancery; and it is expedient that the power of altering such boundaries should be enlarged, with certain consents: be it therefore enacted, that if her majesty in council, upon the representation of the said commissioners made with the consents of the bishop of the diocese and of the patron and incumbent of the parish church, signified under their respective hands and seals, shall think fit to alter the boundaries of a distinct and separate parish, or a district parish or a district chapelry, (formed under the herein before-mentioned acts passed in the fifty-eighth and fifty-ninth years of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, or either of them,) at any time after five years from the time the description of such boundaries has been enrolled in the high court of Chancery, such order in council shall be good and valid in law for the purpose of effecting such alteration, anything in the said recited act of the fifty-eighth year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, limiting the power of making such alteration in such boundaries to five years from the time the description of such boundaries has been enrolled in the high court of Chancery, to the contrary notwithstanding; and such order in council shall be enrolled and registered in manner directed by the said last-mentioned act.

“VII. And be it further enacted, that if the consent of the incumbent as aforesaid is not obtained to such alteration of boundaries, such order in council on the representation of the said commissioners may be made, and shall be good and valid with the consents of the bishop of the diocese and the patron aforesaid, though without the consent of such incumbent; provided that such alteration does not take effect until after the next avoidance of the parish church.

“VIII. And be it further enacted, that the power given to a select vestry appointed under the provisions of the hereinbefore recited act passed in the fifty-ninth year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, to elect new members of such vestry as vacancies may arise by death, resignation, or ceasing to inhabit the parish, shall be extended to cases where any such vestrymen shall neglect to attend the meetings of such select vestry for the space of twelve months, provided such select vestry shall have met at least three times during such twelve months; and in every such case it shall be lawful for such select vestry to declare the member or members of such select vestry so neglecting to attend no longer a member or members of such vestry, and the vacancy or vacancies thereby created shall be filled up in the manner directed by the said last-mentioned act with respect to vacancies arising by death, resignation, or ceasing to inhabit the parish.

“IX. And be it further enacted, that so much of the said recited act passed in the first and second years of the reign of his late majesty King William the Fourth, chapter thirty-eight, as requires that when a church or chapel shall have been or shall be built by subscription under that act, the nomination or appointment thereto shall be signified to the said commissioners, for their consideration, by the major part in value of such subscribers, at the time of the application to the said commissioners, shall be and the same is hereby repealed, so far only that it shall not be necessary for the major part in value of the subscribers to the building and endowment of such church or chapel to declare such nomination or appointment to the said commissioners at the time of such application, but the same may be signified by such subscribers to the said commissioners for their consideration at the time of or subsequently to such application; provided that the same be so signified before the said commissioners affix their common seal to any instrument granting the right of nomination to such church or chapel.

“X. And be it further enacted, that the right of patronage already granted with respect to any such church or chapel shall not be affected by reason of such nomination or appointment not having been sent to the said commissioners at the same time as the application aforesaid.

“XI. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this act no subscriber for a less amount than fifty pounds towards the building or endowment of any church or chapel shall be entitled to join in making such nomination or appointment as aforesaid, under the said recited act, to the said commissioners or the bishop of the diocese.

“XII. And be it further enacted, that for the purposes of the said recited acts passed in the first and second years of the reign of his late majesty King William the Fourth, chapter thirty-eight, and the first and second years of her present majesty's reign, chapter one hundred and seven, an endowment consisting of houses or lands in fee-simple of the value of one thousand pounds at the least, or an endowment of one thousand pounds at the least vested in houses or lands in fee-simple, or an endowment of such a sum vested in houses or lands in fee-simple as will with a further investment in the funds amount to one thousand pounds at the least, may be taken in those cases where the bishop of the diocese is authorized, if he sees fit, to grant the perpetual right of nominating a minister in the manner specified in the said recited acts or either of them; provided that where such endowment consists of houses or lands in fee-simple of the value of one thousand pounds at the least, or where such endowment is composed of such a sum vested in houses or lands in fee-simple as will, with a further investment in the funds, amount to one thousand pounds at the least, a certificate shall in each such case be produced to the bishop of the diocese, signed by two architects or surveyors to the effect that the actual value of such endowment amounts to one thousand pounds at the least.

“XIII. And be it further enacted, that where by the said recited act passed in the first and second years of the reign of his late majesty King William the Fourth future trustees or a future trustee for any church or chapel built and endowed under that act are directed to be chosen in such manner as may in the first instance be agreed upon by the persons building and endowing such church or chapel, or the major part of them, and the bishop of the diocese, under their hands and seals, in the place and stead of any one or more of the trustees who shall from time to time die, resign, or become incapable of acting, and in whom the right of nominating a minister to such church or chapel shall be vested, the major part in value of the subscribers to the building and endowing such church or chapel shall in every such case be entitled to make such agreement touching the appointment of any such future trustees or trustee, with the bishop of the diocese, under their hands and seals, anything in the said recited act to the contrary notwithstanding; providing that from and after the passing of this act no such subscriber shall be so entitled unless his subscription shall amount to at least fifty pounds, as provided by this act.

Courts of equity empowered, whenever a question comes before them, to make decrees or orders extending the system of education and the right of admission into any school, and to establish schemes for the application of its revenues, having due regard to the intentions of the founder.

Latin; and whereas such education, at the period when such schools or the greater part were founded, was supposed not only to be sufficient to qualify boys or youth for admission to the universities, with a view to the learned professions, but also necessary for preparing them for the superior trades and mercantile business; and whereas from the change of times and other causes such education, without instruction in other branches of literature and science, is now of less value to those who are entitled to avail themselves of such charitable foundations, whereby such schools have, in many instances, ceased to afford a substantial fulfilment of the intentions of the founders; and the system of education in such grammar schools ought therefore to be extended and rendered more generally beneficial, in order to afford such fulfilment; but the patrons, visitors, and governors thereof are generally unable of their own authority to establish any other system of education than is expressly provided for by the foundation, and her majesty's courts of law and equity are frequently unable to give adequate relief, and in no case but at considerable expense; and whereas in consequence of changes which have taken place in the population of particular districts it is necessary, for the purpose aforesaid, that in some cases the advantages of such grammar schools should be extended to boys other than those to whom by the terms of the foundation or the existing statutes the same is now limited, and that in other cases some restriction should be imposed, either with reference to the total number to be admitted into the school, or as regards their proficiency at the time when they may demand admission; but in this respect also the said patrons, visitors, and governors, and the courts of equity, are frequently without sufficient authority to make such extension or restriction; and whereas it is expedient that in certain cases grammar schools in the same place should be united; and whereas no remedy can be applied in the premises without the aid of parliament, be it therefore declared and enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that whenever, after the passing of this act, any question may come under consideration in any of her majesty's courts of equity concerning the system of education thereafter to be established in any grammar school, or the right of admission into the same, whether such question be already pending, or whether the same shall arise upon any information, petition, or other proceedings which may be now or at any time hereafter filed or instituted, for whatever cause the same may have been or may be instituted, according to the ordinary course of proceedings in courts of equity, or under the provisions of this act, it shall be lawful for the court to make such decrees or orders as to the said court shall seem expedient, as well for extending the system of education to other useful branches of literature and science, in addition to or (subject to the provisions hereinafter contained) in lieu of the Greek and Latin languages, or such other instruction as may be required by the terms of the foundation or the then existing statutes, as also for extending or restricting the freedom or the right of admission to such school, by determining the number or the qualifications of boys who may thereafter be admissible thereto, as free scholars or otherwise, and for settling the terms of admission to and continuance in the same, and to establish such schemes for the application of the revenues of any such schools as may in the opinion of the court be conducive to the rendering or maintaining such schools in the greatest degree efficient and useful, with due regard to the intentions of the respective founders and benefactors, and to declare at what period and upon what event such decrees or orders, or any directions contained therein, shall be brought into operation, and that such decrees and orders shall have force and effect, notwithstanding any provisions contained in the instruments of foundation, endowment, or benefaction, or in the then existing statutes: provided always, that in case there shall be any special visitor appointed by the founder, or other competent authority, opportunity shall be given to such visitor to be heard on the matters in question, in such manner as the court shall think proper, previously to the making such decrees or orders.

Before making

“II. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in making any such decrees or orders order the court shall consider and have regard to the intentions of the founders and benefactors of every such grammar school, the nature and extent of the foundation and endowment, the rights of parties interested therein, the statutes by which the same has been hitherto governed, the character of the instruction theretofore afforded therein, and the existing state and condition of the said school, and also the condition, rank, and number of the children entitled to and capable of enjoying the privilege of the said school, and of those who may become so capable if any extended or different system of education, or any extension of the right of admission to the said school, or any new statutes, shall be established.

“III. Provided also, and be it enacted, that unless it shall be found necessary from the insufficiency of the revenues of any grammar school, nothing in this act contained shall be construed as authorizing the court to dispense with the teaching of Latin and Greek, or either of such languages now required to be taught, or to treat such instruction otherwise than as the principal object of the foundation; nor to dispense with any statute or provision now existing, so far as relates to the qualification of any schoolmaster or under master.

“IV. Provided also, and be it enacted, that in extending, as hereinbefore provided, the system of education or the right of admission into any grammar school in which the teaching of Greek or Latin shall be still retained, the court shall not allow of the admission of children of an earlier age or of less proficiency than may be required by the foundation or existing statutes, or may be necessary to show that the children are of capacity to profit by the kind of education designed by the founder.

“V. Provided also, and be it enacted, that whenever, on account of the insufficiency of the revenues of any grammar school, the court shall think fit to dispense with the teaching of Greek or Latin, the court shall prescribe such a course of instruction, and shall require such qualifications in the children at the period of their admission, as will tend to maintain the character of the school as nearly as, with reference to the amount of the revenues, it may be analogous to that which was contemplated by the founder; and that whenever, on the like account, the court shall think fit to dispense with any statute or provision as far as relates to the qualification of any schoolmaster or under master, the court shall substitute such qualification as will provide for every object implied in the original qualification, which may be capable of being retained notwithstanding such insufficiency of the revenues.

“VI. Provided also, and be it enacted, that in case the appointment of any additional schoolmaster or under master shall be found necessary for the purpose of carrying the objects of this act into execution, the court shall require the same qualification in such new schoolmaster or under master respectively as may be required by the existing statutes in the present schoolmaster or under master, except such as may be wholly referable to their capability of giving instruction in any particular branch of education; but that every other qualification implied in the qualification of the original schoolmaster or under master, and capable of being retained, shall be retained and required in such new schoolmaster or under master; and the court shall also in such case declare in whom the appointment of such new schoolmaster or under master shall be vested, so as to preserve as far as may be the existing rights of all parties with regard to patronage.

“VII. Provided also, and be it enacted, that although under the provisions hereinbefore contained the teaching of Greek or Latin in any grammar school may be dispensed with, every such school, and the masters thereof, shall be still considered as grammar schools and grammar schoolmasters, and shall continue subject to the jurisdiction of the ordinary as heretofore; and that no person shall be authorized to exercise the office of schoolmaster or under master therein without having such licence, or without having made such oath, declaration, or subscription as may be required by law of the schoolmasters or under masters respectively of other grammar schools.

“IX. And be it enacted, that in case there shall be in any city, town, or place any grammar school or grammar schools, the revenues of which shall of themselves be insufficient to admit of the purposes of their founder or founders being effected, but which revenues if joined to the revenues of any other grammar school or grammar schools in the same city, town, or place would afford the means of effecting the purposes of the founders of such several schools, it shall be lawful for the court of Chancery to direct such schools to be united, and the revenues of the schools so united to be applied to the support of one school to be formed by such union, and which shall be carried on according to a scheme to be settled for that purpose under the direction of the said court; provided always, that before application shall be made to the court to direct such union the consent of the visitor, patron, and governors of every school to be effected thereby shall be first obtained.

“X. Provided always, and be it enacted, that no new statutes affecting the duties or emoluments of any schoolmaster or under master shall be brought into operation as regards any such master who shall have been appointed previously to the passing of this act without his consent in writing; but that in case any such schoolmaster or under master as last aforesaid shall be unwilling to give such consent as aforesaid, and shall be desirous or willing to resign his office on receiving a retiring pension, it shall be lawful for the governors, if there be any competent to act, or if there be no such governors, for the visitor, to award to such master such pension as to them or him, (as the case may be,) shall seem reasonable from the time of his resignation, which pension, if approved as hereinafter mentioned, the trustees of the said school are hereby authorized and required to pay to him, or his order, according to the terms of such awardment.

“XI. And be it enacted, that any schoolmaster appointed in any grammar school after the passing of this act shall receive his appointment subject to such new statutes as may be made and confirmed by the court of Chancery, in pursuance of any proceedings which may be commenced under this act, within six months after such vacancy shall have occurred.

“XII. Provided always, and be it enacted, that the term on the expiration of which any right of nomination or appointment of the master in any grammar school would otherwise lapse shall, on the first avoidance of the office which shall occur after the passing of this act, be computed from the time of the confirmation of the new statutes by which the school is to be in future governed, or if no proceedings are pending for the purpose of having statutes established from the expiration of the time within which such proceedings may be instituted, and not from the time of the avoidance.

“XIII. And whereas it is expedient that the discipline of grammar schools should be more fully enforced; be it declared and enacted, that in all cases in which sufficient powers, to be exercised by way of visitation or otherwise in respect of the discipline of such schools, shall already exist and be vested in any person or persons, it shall be lawful for such person or persons to exercise the same when and so often as they shall deem fit, either by themselves personally or by commission, without being first requested or required so to do, and likewise to direct such returns to be made by the masters of such schools, of the state thereof, of the books used therein, and of such other particulars as they may think proper, and also to order such examinations to be held in respect of the proficiency of the scholars attending the same as to him or them may seem expedient.

“XIV. And be it enacted, that in all cases in which any person or persons having authority, by way of visitation or otherwise, in respect of the discipline of any grammar school, may not have sufficient power properly to enforce the same, it shall be lawful for the court of Chancery to order and direct that the powers of such person or persons shall be enlarged to such extent and in such manner, and subject to such provisions, as to the said court shall seem fit.

“XV. And be it enacted, that in all cases in which no authority, to be exercised by way of visitation in respect of the discipline of any grammar school, is now vested in any known person or persons, it shall be lawful for the bishop of the diocese wherein the same is locally situated to apply to the court of Chancery, stating the same: and the said court shall have power if it so think fit to order that the said bishop shall be at liberty to visit and regulate the said school in respect of the discipline thereof, but not further or otherwise.

“XVI. And be it enacted, that in event of the person or persons by whom powers of visitation in respect of the discipline of any grammar school ought to be exercised refusing or neglecting so to do within a reasonable time after the same ought to be exercised, or in the event of its being uncertain in whom the right to exercise such powers is vested, such powers shall be exercised pro hac vice by some person specially appointed by the authority of the court of Chancery, on application made by any person or persons interested in such grammar school: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall exempt any visitor from being compelled by any process to which he is now amenable to perform any act which he is now compellable to perform.

“XVII. And whereas it is expedient to provide for the more easy removal of unfit and improper masters; be it declared and enacted, that it shall be lawful for the court of Chancery to empower the person or persons having powers of visitation in respect of the discipline of any grammar school, or who shall be specially appointed to exercise the same under this act, and the governors, or either of them, after such inquiries and by such mode of proceeding as the court shall direct, to remove any master of any grammar school who has been negligent in the discharge of his duties, or who is unfit or incompetent to discharge them properly and efficiently, either from immoral conduct, incapacity, age, or from any other infirmity or cause whatsoever.

“XVIII. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in case the cause for which any master may be removed shall be incompetency from age or other infirmity, it shall be lawful for the said governors, with the approbation of the visitor, to assign to the use of such master any portion of the annual revenues of the said grammar school in one or more donations, or by way of annuity determinable on the death of such master, or on any other specified event during his life, or to assign to him any part of the estate of the said grammar school for his occupation for a term determinable in like manner; provided that there shall remain sufficient means to provide for the efficient performance of the duties which belong to the office from which such master shall be removed.

“XIX. And for the more speedy and effectual recovery of the possession of any premises belonging to any grammar school which the master who shall have been dismissed as aforesaid, or any person who shall have ceased to be master, shall hold over after his dismissal or ceasing to be master, except under such assignment as may have been made under the provisions of this act, the term of such assignment being still unexpired, and the premises assigned being in the actual occupation of the master so dismissed or ceased to be master, be it enacted, that when and as often as any master holding any schoolroom, schoolhouse, or any other house, land, or tenement, by virtue of his office, or as tenant or otherwise under the trustees of the said grammar school, except on lease for a term of years still unexpired, shall have been dismissed as aforesaid, or shall have ceased to be master, and such master, or (if he shall not actually occupy the premises or shall only occupy a part thereof) any person by whom the same or any part thereof shall be then actually occupied, shall neglect or refuse to quit and deliver up possession of the premises, or of such part thereof respectively, except such as are hereinbefore excepted, within the space of three months after such dismissal or ceasing to be master, it shall be lawful for justices of the peace acting for the dis-

"Whereas it is expedient to provide for the final disposition of the lands called Clergy Reserves in Canada, and for the appropriation of the yearly income arising

(1) In 1840, the following questions respecting the clergy reserves in Canada were submitted to the judges by the House of Lords:

"I. Whether the words, 'a protestant clergy,' in Stat. 31 Geo. 3, c. 31, ss. 35-42, include any other than clergy of the church of England, and protestant bishops and priests and deacons, who have received episcopal ordination? And if any other, what other?"

"II. Whether the effect of the 41st section of Stat. 31 Geo. 3, c. 31, be not entirely prospective, giving power to the legislative council and assembly of either of the provinces of Upper or Lower Canada as to future allotments and appropriations; or whether it can be extended to affect lands which have been already allotted and appropriated under former grants?"

"III. Whether the legislative council and assembly of the province of Upper Canada, having in an act 'to provide for the sale of the clergy reserves, and for the distribution of the proceeds thereof,' enacted, that it or to arise therefrom, for the maintenance of religion and the advancement of Christian knowledge within the said province; be it enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that after the passing of this act it shall be lawful for the governor of the province of Canada, by and with the advice of his executive council, and under such regulations as may be by him from time to time in council established in that behalf, and approved by the queen in council, to sell, grant, alienate, and convey in fee-simple all or any of the said clergy reserves: provided nevertheless, that the quantity of the said clergy reserves so to be sold as aforesaid in any one year shall not in the whole exceed one hundred thousand acres, without the previous approbation in writing of one of her majesty's principal secretaries of state.

"II. And be it enacted, that the proceeds of all past sales of such reserves which have been or shall be invested under the authority of an act passed in the eighth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act to authorize the Sale of Part of the Clergy Reserves in the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada,' shall be subject to such orders as the governor in council shall make for investing, either in some public funds in the province of Canada, secured on the consolidated fund of the said province, or in the public funds of Great Britain and Ireland, the amount now funded in England, together with the proceeds hereafter to be received from the sales of all or any of the said reserves, or any part thereof: provided always, that the necessary expenses of such sales shall be borne and defrayed out of the first monies received therefrom.

"III. And be it enacted, that the interest and dividends accruing upon such investments of the proceeds of all clergy reserves sold or to be sold, and also the interest to accrue upon sales on credit of clergy reserves, and all rents arising from clergy reserves that have been or may be demised for any term of years, shall be paid to the receiver-general of the province of Canada, or such other person as shall be appointed to receive the public revenues of the said province, and shall together form an annual fund for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, and shall be paid by him from time to time in discharge of any warrant or warrants which shall from time to time be issued by the governor, in pursuance of the provisions of this act; (that is to say,) in the first place, to satisfy all such annual stipends and allowances as have been heretofore assigned and given to the clergy of the churches of England and Scotland, or to any other religious bodies or denominations of Christians in Canada, and to which the faith of the crown is pledged, during the natural lives should be lawful for the governor, by and with the advice of the executive council, to sell, alienate, and convey in fee-simple, all or any of the said clergy reserves; and having further enacted, in the same act, that the proceeds of all past sales of such reserves which have been or may be invested under the authority of the act of the imperial parliament passed in the seventh and eighth years of the reign of his late majesty King George the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act to authorize the sale of Part of the Clergy Reserves in the Province of Upper and Lower Canada,' shall be subject to such orders and directions as the governor in council shall make and establish for investing in any securities within the province of Upper Canada, the amount now funded in England, together with the proceeds hereafter to be received from the sales of all or any of the said reserves, or any part thereof, did, in making such enactments, or either of them, exceed their lawful authority?"

To the first question, the judges answered: That the words "a protestant clergy," in Stat. 31 Geo. 3, c. 31, were large enough to include, and that they did include, other clergy than the clergy of the church of England.

And when their lordships asked, "If any other, what other?" the judges answered, "The clergy of the church of Scotland."

To the second question, the judges replied: That the effect of the 41st section of the statute was prospective only; and that the power thereby given to the legislative council and assembly of either province could not be extended to affect lands which had been already allotted and appropriated under former grants.

In answer to the last question, the judges said: That the legislative council and assembly in Upper Canada had exceeded their authority in passing an act "to provide for the sale of the clergy reserves, and for the distribution of the proceeds thereof," in respect of both the enactments specified in the question propounded to them by their lordships; and that the sales which had been, or might be, effected in consequence, were void. 3 Mirror of Parliament, 2390, 2719.

“IV. And be it enacted, that as soon as the said fund shall exceed the amount of the several stipends and allowances aforesaid, and subject always to the prior satisfaction and payment of the same, the said annual fund shall be appropriated as follows; (that is to say,) the net interest and dividends accruing upon the investments of the proceeds of all sales of such reserves sold or to be sold under the authority of the before-recited act of the eighth year of the reign of King George the Fourth shall be divided into three equal parts, of which two shall be appropriated to the church of England and one to the church of Scotland in Canada; and the net interest and dividends accruing upon the investments of the proceeds of all sales of such reserves sold under the authority of this act shall be divided into six equal parts, of which two shall be appropriated to the church of England and one to the church of Scotland in Canada: provided always, that the amount of the before-mentioned stipends and allowances which shall be paid to and received by any clergyman of either of the said churches of England or Scotland shall be taken, as far as the same will go, as a part of the share accruing to each church respectively by virtue of this act; (that is to say,) the stipends and allowances to any clergyman of the church of England as part of the share accruing to the church of England, and the stipends and allowances to any clergyman of the church of Scotland as part of the share accruing to the said church of Scotland, so that neither of the said churches shall receive any further or other sum beyond such respective stipends and allowances until the proportion of the said annual fund allotted to them respectively in manner aforesaid shall exceed the annual amount of such stipends and allowances.

LXXII. STAT. 3 & 4 VICTORIÆ, C. 86(1). A.D. 1840.

"An Act for better enforcing Church Discipline(2)."

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. C. 86.

"Whereas the manner of proceeding in causes for the correction of clerks

(1) In Sanders v. Head, (3 Curt. 47.) Sir Herbert Jenner Post gave the following judicial opinion respecting the phraseology of the Church Discipline Act: "Undoubtedly the phraseology of the act is not such as, unless the act had been passed in a hurry, would have been permitted to remain. It is clear, that the same words are used in different senses in different parts of the act: for example, in the 13th section which directs the bishop to send letters of request to this court, the words 'first instance' are used in a different sense from that in which they are used in the 15th section; for the 15th section enacts, 'that it shall be lawful for any party who shall think himself aggrieved by the judgment pronounced in the first instance by the bishop, or in the court of appeal of the province, to appeal from such judgment, and such appeal shall be to the archbishop, and shall be heard before the judge of the court of appeal of the province.' Now, there the words first instance, cannot mean the notice, but the sentence on the first hearing of the cause. So they are used in the latter part of the same section. 'When the cause shall have been heard and determined in the first instance in the court of the archbishop.' By these words, the same meaning is not intended to be conveyed in the two sections. What I understand by them is, that at any time before the commissioners have proceeded in the inquiry, the bishop may send the case up to be heard elsewhere."

It may be here observed, that Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, does not apply to the Isle of Man.

(1) Vicar-choral in holy orders:—The vicars-choral of St. Paul's are laymen, and the same remark will, in some instances, apply to other cathedrals. The Church Discipline Act only applies to vicars-choral in holy orders, consequently, lay vicars-choral are not subjected to its provisions; but they continue under the jurisdiction of the visitor, whose authority is unimpaired by Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86.

(2) Bishop construed to comprehend:—Bishops are not comprehended under the words "ecclesiastical persons." The rule of the canon law, is, "Clericus, ex vi verbi, non comprehendit episcopum, sed cum adjuncto, sic, in quantum illud adjunctum potest concernere episcopum;" (Lyndw. de Loc. et Con. c. Vendent. v. Si quis Clericus;) and the same principle is recognised in the following extracts: "Ecclesiasticos judices intellige de inferioribus episcopis; nam episcopi hac pœnâ non ligantur, eò quòd de eis non fit mentio specialis;" (Ibid. de Testam. c. Ita quor. v. Eccles. Jud.;) "Hanc pœnam in hoc casu non incurrunt episcopi, eò quòd de eis non fit mentio specialis." Ibid. c. Adeo. quor. v. Suspensionis.

VICT. c. 86.

I. CLERGYMEN SOLEMNIZING MARRIAGES WITHOUT MAKING DUE INQUIRIES AS TO THE RESIDENCE OF THE PARTIES.

In Wyns (Clerk) v. Davies & Weever, (1 Curt. 69,) the principal offence charged was, that of publishing the banns of marriage, and of marrying persons not resident within the parish; and the objection taken to the admissibility of the articles, was, that the offence imputed to the appellant, if a violation of the law, was not cognizable in the ecclesiastical courts; and a doubt was raised, whether in fact it ever was cognizable in those courts; or if so, whether the jurisdiction had not been taken away by subsequent statutes.

Upon such questions Sir Herbert Jenner observed: "The correction of the clergy in matters relating to the performance of divine worship, is, and always has been, more peculiarly the province of the ordinary.

"That the canon law prohibited clandestine marriages, and inflicted punishment on the parties contracting such marriages, as well as on the minister solemnizing them, is abundantly clear; and it is no less certain, that marriages were forbidden to be solemnized by any other than the priest of the parish in which the parties resided; unless with the licence of the diocesan and of the curate of the parish. . . .

"The Constitution of Archbishop Reynolds is as follows: (Lyndw. l. 4, tit. 1, De Sponsalibus et Matrimonio): 'In matrimonio quoque contrahendo semper tribus diebus dominicis vel festivis à se distantibus, [this now, by Stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 76 (ante 1229), must be on three Sundays,] quasi tribus edictis, perquirant sacerdotes à populo de immunitate sponsi et sponse. Si quis autem sacerdos hujusmodi edicta non servaverit, poenam nuper in concilio super hoc statutam non evadat.'

"And as Lyndwood observes in the Gloss.: 'Hæc poena est suspensioalis per triennium.' Decretal. Greg. l. 4, tit. 3, c. 3.

"Here then is suspension for three years of the minister solemnizing matrimony without publication of banns. Simon Mepham's Constitution is an authority also on this point: 'Quia ex contractibus matrimonialibus absque bannorum editione præhabita initia, nonnulla pericula evenerunt, et manifestum est indices provenire, omnibus et singulis suffraganeis nostris præcipimus statuendo quod decretalem cum inhibitione, (quæ prohibetur ne qui matrimonium contrahant, bannis non premisis in singulis ecclesiis parochialibus sue diocesis pluribus diebus solemnibus cum major populi affuerit multitudo,) exponi faciant in vulgari, et eam firmiter observari, quibusvis sacerdotibus etiam non parochialibus, qui contractibus matrimonialibus ante solennem editionem bannorum initis præsumperint interesse, poenam suspensionis ab officio per triennium infigendo et hujusmodi contrahentes etiam si nullum subest impedimentum poenâ debitâ percellendo.' Lyndw. l. 4, tit. 3.

"Also Archbishop Stratford (Ibid.): 'Præsentis auctoritate concilii statuimus, quod exnunc matrimonia contrahentes, et ea inter se solemnizari facientes, quæcunque impedi-menta canonica in ea parte scientes, aut presumptionem verisimilem eorumdem habentes; sacerdotes quoque qui solemnizationes matrimoniorum prohibitorum hujusmodi seu etiam licitorum inter alios quam suos parochianos in posterum scienter fecerint, discommuniari vel curatorem ipsorum contrahentium super hoc licentiâ non obtentâ . . . majoris excommunicationis sententiam incurrant ipso facto.'

"The text law then especially prohibits priests from solemnizing marriage, even though lawful, between others than their own parishioners; and Lyndwood on the same chapter observes, 'Matrimonium dicitur clandestinum multis modis;' and amongst others, says, 'Quia non præmittuntur publicæ denuntiationes sive banna publica.'

"There is then no doubt that, not only the parties contracting, but also the priest solemnizing clandestine marriages, were punishable by the ancient canon law as received and allowed here; and that a marriage, not preceded by publication of banns, or licence, or between persons not parishioners, was in the meaning of that law a clandestine marriage; and this continued to be the law, down to the time of the passing of the Marriage Act (26 Geo. 2, c. 33, ante 847); at least, in 1736, it was so held in the case of Middleton v. Croft, (2 Atk. 650, ante 660.) so often referred to, and so much relied on in the argument. And the case of Mattingley v. Martyn, (Jon. (Sir W.), 257.) was mentioned by Lord Hardwicke in support of the part of this judgment, where it was resolved: 'That if any person marry without publication of banns, or licence dispensing with it, they are citable for it in the ecclesiastical court;' and this even in the case of lay persons, so à fortiori in the case of the clergy.

"The question then is simply reduced to this, whether the Marriage Act, (4 Geo. 4, c. 76,) by which a clergyman knowingly and wilfully solemnizing marriage without due publication of banns, or licence, is liable to be convicted as a felon, and to be transported for fourteen years, has repealed the canon law, and taken away the ancient jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical court in such matters; and this, undoubtedly, is a very grave and serious question, and deserves great consideration, more especially as there does not, as before observed, appear to have been any actual decision upon it; the only case which is to be found, being that of Campbell (Clerk) v. Aldrich (Clerk), (2 Wils. 79,) which occurred shortly after the Marriage Act (26 Geo. 2); that case was to this effect: 'A clergyman was called upon to answer in the ecclesiastical court, for solemnizing marriage without banns, or licence, and for performing other religious rites without the licence of the ordinary, and a prohibition was served upon the suggestion, that since the Marriage Act, the offence was only cognizable in the temporal courts. The court did not absolutely determine the point, but the prohibition was made absolute as to marrying without banns or licence, the plaintiff having leave to declare in prohibition, in order that the question on the Marriage Act might be more solemnly argued and decided, &c. &c.' I understand, intimating an inclination against the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical court; not deciding that point, as nothing further appears to have been done in the case. . . .

"In the case of Mora v. Mora, (2 Atk. 157,) in 1741, which was before the Marriage Act, (26 Geo. 2.) Lord Hardwicke said, 'It is very surprising when canons, with respect to marriages, have laid down directions so plainly for the conduct of ecclesiastical officers and clergymen, (which, though they have not the authority of an act of parliament, and consequently are not binding upon laymen, yet certainly are prescriptions to the ecclesiastical courts, and likewise to clergymen,) that there should be such frequent instances of their departing from them, and introducing a practice entirely repugnant to them, vide Can. 62, 102, &c. in 1603, all of them extremely plain in their directions to ecclesiastical officers and clergymen; one would think nobody ever read them, neither the officers of the spiritual courts, nor clergymen, or they could not act so diametrically opposite to them.

"No ecclesiastical persons can dispense with a canon, for they are obliged to pursue the directions in them with the utmost exactness, and it is in the power of the crown to do it only.

"What Mr. Charles (the clergyman) swears, I believe is true, that it is very frequent for surrogates to fill up the blanks in licences with the name of any other parish, and this in some measure may justify him, as it is the common method among clergymen; but then this will not excuse with regard to penalties in the canon, which expressly directs, that no clergyman shall presume to marry a person out of the parishes in which the man and woman reside.

"In Priestley v. Lamb, (6 Ves. 421,) in which there had been a marriage by banns at the parish church of St. Andrew, Holborn, between a young lady who was at school at Camberwell, and a person who had chambers at Furnival's Inn. The parties left Camberwell on the morning of the marriage, and it did not appear that the lady had actually resided in Holborn; they were afterwards again married at Lambeth, and the clerk of the parish stated in his affidavit, that it is not customary to make any inquiry as to the residence of parties applying to be married. Lord Eldon said: 'By the affidavit of the clerk of the parish of Lambeth, it is disclosed, that they conceive in that parish, that they do their duty to the public and to the individuals, whom they are to marry, never making any inquiry as to the residence of the parties. In the canon law which binds the clergy of this country, from 1328 to 1603, it is laid down, that it is highly criminal to celebrate marriage without a due publication of banns, which must be interpreted a publication of banns by persons having to the best of their power informed themselves, that they publish banns between persons resident in the parish; and very heavy penalties are by that law inflicted upon clergymen celebrating marriage without licence, or a due publication of banns.' He then goes on to mention the penalty by statute, and adds: 'A subsequent clause makes it felony in a clergyman to celebrate marriage without licence or publication of banns. I do not mean to intimate, that a clergyman believing there was a residence would be guilty within that clause. But upon the principles of the common law, as well as the statute law, laying penalties upon marriage without licence or a due publication of banns, though such a fact should not be within the meaning of that clause, it has the character of an offence within the law of this country. What other sense can be given to the 10th section of the act, which looking at the person named, as this girl is, enacts, that after there has been a marriage de facto with publication of banns, no evidence shall be given to disprove the fact of residence in any suit, in which the validity of the marriage comes in question. But for all other purposes it may be the subject of inquiry; and the law of the country would reach it by a criminal information.'

"From what I have seen in this court, alluding to the cases in which Lord Tharlew and Lord Rosalyn ordered the attendance of the clergymen, I know that this subject is carried on with a negligence and carelessness, that draws in gentlemen of good intentions; and I feel, that it may be very difficult in this great town, with all possible diligence, to execute this duty as effectually as the law seems to require, that they should execute it: but where a case has occurred, in which it is clear, that if any one of the parties had done what the law required from all of them, this marriage could not have taken place, I must say, it amounted to a criminality, which I hope will not occur in future.' Observations to the same effect were also made by Lord Eldon, in the cases of Nicholson v. Squire, (16 Ves. 260, ante 1234,) and Warter v. Yorke, (19 Ibid. 453.) For the several reasons, therefore, which I have stated, I am of opinion, that the original jurisdiction which the ecclesiastical courts possessed and exercised in cases of this description, is not taken away by any of the statutes; that the ordinary is still entitled to proceed to the correction of any of his clergy who may offend against the order of the church, in publishing banns and solemnising matrimony in any other manner than that prescribed by the law; and that if the charges contained in these articles shall be established by evidence, Mr. Wynn is liable to be canonically punished for such offence."

Voysey v. Martin (Clerk).*

In a case in which James Voysey was the complainant, and the Rev. George Martin the respondent, the commissioners under Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, having reported that there were prima facie grounds for proceedings, and the respondent having submitted under the sixth section of such statute, the Bishop of Exeter, on the 4th of April, 1843, pronounced the following sentence:

"The facts of this case are not disputed. A young man aged eighteen years and six months, dwelling in the parish of Crediton, in his father's house, and a young woman dwelling in the same parish, were married by banns, in the parish church of St. Pancras, in Exeter, by the rector, the Rev. George Martin, who is thus brought under the penalty of the 62nd canon, unless it be shewn, that having taken all due pains to inform himself, he married the parties under such deception, as a discrete man, in the fair exercise of his discretion, could not have avoided.

"In looking to the circumstances, under which Mr. Martin was deceived, one preliminary consideration cannot fail to present itself, vis., that the narrow limits and small population of his parish, containing, by the census of 1831, only 379 persons, render due inquiry in his instance, at all times, a matter of more than ordinary facility; and deprive him therefore of any excuse which might have been urged by a minister of one of our larger and more largely peopled parishes. What degree of caution, and what minuteness of inquiry would be deemed necessary in such a case, it is not for me now to define; I know not, indeed, that any precise line can be defined. An honest man, acting bonâ fide with the intention of honestly making the inquiry, to secure the object for which the inquiry is enjoined, is not likely to fall short of his duty. Nor was Mr. Martin left by the law without direction as to the time of residence, respecting which he might most properly inquire, or without sufficient means enabling him to make his inquiry effectual. For the Stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 7, provides, that 'no minister shall be obliged to publish banns, unless the persons shall, seven days at least before the time required for the first publication, deliver or cause to be delivered to him a notice in writing of their names, of their house or houses of abode, and of the time during which they have dwelt, inhabited, or lodged in such house or houses.'

"Now the obvious meaning of this provision is, that no parties are to be considered as dwelling in a parish for the purpose of being married by banns, who have not dwelt therein more than a week before the first publication, for the notice, which is to be given seven days at least before the publication, ought to state the time during which the parties have previously dwelt within the parish.

"True it is, that a clergyman is not bound to demand such a notice. But if, waving the security, which the statute provides for him, he finds himself, in consequence, to have fallen into a violation of the canon, he has no right to complain, should the penalty of the canon be inflicted.

"In the present case, Mr. Martin was content to act on a notice, containing only the names of the parties, and a certificate under the hand of the keeper of a lodging house, that they were lodgers in his house, without any statement whatever of the time during which they had been lodgers; although this certificate bore date on the very day of the first publication.

"It appears, indeed, that he inquired of the clerk, who delivered the notice and certificate to him, how long the parties had been resident, and was answered 'about six days'; in other words, not long enough to satisfy the manifest intention of the statute.

"Mr. Martin subsequently made inquiry, in person, at the house named in the certificate; a precaution, which, however in itself praiseworthy, was unfortunately rendered altogether useless by the manner in which he conducted his inquiry, for, the only question asked by him was, whether the parties had lodgings in the house, a question which could hardly elicit any other answer than that which had been already given by the written certificate. Yet, the quality of the house, being a ticket over its door, inscribed, 'lodging for single men,' might well have excited some special caution in any considerate mind.

"It further appears, by the admission of Mr. Martin to the father of the young man, that, before the marriage, he had asked him of his age, and was informed 'eighteen years and six months,' an answer, which also ought to have prevented him, even at the last hour, from completing the indiscretion, of which, however, he had already received more than sufficient warning.

"Such are the main facts. If the case had proceeded to a full hearing, and if anything had appeared to prevent a conviction, the sentence of the canon, heavy as it is, must have been pronounced, 'Suspensio per triennium ipso facto.'

"Happily, the parties have availed themselves of a provision in the statute 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 6, and, in the present stage of the inquiry, after the finding by the commission, 'that there is sufficient prima facie ground for instituting further proceedings,' they have signified their 'consent, that the bishop shall forthwith, without any further proceedings, pronounce such sentence as he shall think fit.'

"I am thus enabled to exercise a discretion, which otherwise would not have belonged to me, but which—the absence of everything like imputation of sordid motives to the part of Mr. Martin, the great respectability of his general character, his inexperience, and, I fear, I must add, the too prevalent practice of many of his seniors in the ministry, make me rejoice to exercise in his favour.

"Upon the whole, therefore, considering that this is the first case, in which, within our recollection, proceedings have been instituted under this highly penal canon, I trust, that justice will be satisfied by my dealing with it as an occasion for publicly proclaiming the law to my clergy, rather than for enforcing its penalty. Accordingly, I hereby admonish Mr. Martin of his error, and sentence him to pay the sum of ten pounds nomine expensarum.

"But I cannot dismiss the case, without expressing my earnest hope that the prosecution will serve as a warning to others whose conduct may hitherto have been too excusable, than his; and that to all, it will be apparent, that the public and private evils, resulting from the encouragement of irregular and clandestine marriages, will give to the country an indisputable right to respect that the leniency of the present statute be not repeated.

"It may be said, as I hear it has been said, that the effect of greater strictness of inquiry on the part of the clergy, will be to induce more frequent resort to the manse house and the registrar's office. Be it so, let those who seek to be caught together with a lie on their mouths, go any whither rather than to the house of God, let them not claim the benediction of the church on their unhallowed unions, above all, let them not find pandars to their crime in the ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God."

Extract from a Charge of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, respecting the Marriage of Non-residents.

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, in a charge to the clergy of his lordship's diocese at the visitation in August and September, 1844, commented in the following language upon clandestine marriages. "The other subject upon which I am constrained to renew my exhortations, is that of clandestine marriages. Perhaps I cannot better introduce this matter to your notice, than by repeating the words in which I mentioned it in a charge delivered nine years ago: 'I am under the necessity of mentioning, that several complaints have reached me from various parts of the diocese, of marriages being celebrated by banns in parishes where neither of the parties had been actually resident. This practice is greatly to be deprecated, as opening the door to all the mischiefs of clandestine, and possibly, of incestuous unions. It has the additional bad consequence of casting upon the clergyman in whose parish such marriages take place, the suspicion of negligence, or of some sordid motives, and of occasioning jealousy and misunderstanding among parochial ministers. I believe the real fault to lie in the laxity of the statute itself. But this is a reason for the clergyman to exert greater vigilance and caution against imposition. At any rate, whenever called upon to publish the banns of persons unknown to him as parishioners, he is bound to avail himself of the seven days' notice which the law prescribes, and to ascertain that the residence is not fictitious, but that the parties have been actual and bonâ fide inhabitants of the alleged houses for the time professed in the notice.'"

II. CELEBRATING A MARRIAGE BETWEEN TWO PERSONS WITHIN THE PROHIBITED DEGREES OF AFFINITY.

The following judgment was delivered by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol against the Rev. G. M. D'Arcy Irvine, for wilfully celebrating an illegal marriage. "In the name of God, Amen. We, James Henry, by Divine permission, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, having, pursuant to the provisions of an act of parliament, passed in the 3rd and 4th years of the reign of her present majesty, Queen Victoria, entitled, 'An Act for better enforcing Church Discipline,' appointed certain commissioners for the purpose of making inquiry as to the grounds of a charge brought by the Venerable Thomas Thorpe, B.D., Archdeacon of Bristol, against the Rev. Gorges Marcus D'Arcy Irvine, Clerk, stipendiary curate of the parish of St. Mary Redcliffe, in the city of Bristol, within our diocese and jurisdiction, for having on the 29th day of January, in the present year, 1843, in the church of St. Mary Redcliffe, aforesaid, celebrated an illegal marriage between William Rodgers and Charlotte Durbin, both of the parish of Nailsea, in the county of Somerset, he the said Gorges Marcus D'Arcy Irvine, knowing at the time, from credible information, that such parties were neither of them resident in the parish of St. Mary Redcliffe, and also that they were within the prohibited degrees of affinity; and we, having received the report of the said commissioners, that after full inquiry made according to the directions of the statute, they are unanimously of opinion that there is sufficient prima facie ground for instituting further proceedings against the said Gorges Marcus D'Arcy Irvine; and having ourselves carefully examined and compared the depositions of the witnesses taken before our said commissioners, and having likewise deliberately considered all the matters laid before us by the said Gorges Marcus D'Arcy Irvine in defence of his conduct, and having received the consent in writing of the said Thomas Thorpe and Gorges Marcus D'Arcy Irvine to our pronouncing, without any further proceeding, such sentence in this case as we shall think fit; we do hereby pronounce, declare, and adjudge, that the said Gorges Marcus D'Arcy Irvine is guilty of having knowingly and wilfully committed the offence with which he stands charged; we, therefore, do decree, that the said Rev. Gorges Marcus D'Arcy Irvine be suspended from the discharge and execution of all the functions of his sacred office in the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol, that is to say, from reading the common prayer, preaching the word of God, administering the holy sacraments, and performing all other duties of a clergyman, for the space of one year, such suspension to commence from the time of the publication of these presents. And we do condemn him in the sum of 5*l.* towards defraying the expenses of these proceedings. And we do hereby revoke the two licences severally granted by us to the said Gorges Marcus D'Arcy Irvine, dated respectively the 19th day of July, 1840, and the 3rd day of December, 1840: the one for performing the office of stipendiary curate in the parish church of St. Mary Redcliffe; the other for performing the office of stipendiary chaplain of the bridewell or house of correction of the city and county of Bristol. And we, the said James Henry, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, do hereby enjoin the churchwardens of the parish of St. Mary Redcliffe, jointly and severally, to affix, or cause to be affixed, a copy of this our sentence on the principal door of the church of this said parish, within one day after they shall have received these presents, and that they shall deposit a copy of the sentence in the chest belonging to the said parish; and we do hereby direct that these presents, under our hand and episcopal seal, shall be exhibited to the said Gorges Marcus D'Arcy Irvine, a true copy of the same being left with him, and that the original be then deposited, along with all the other proceedings had in this cause, in the registry of our diocesan court of Bristol.

"Given under our hand and episcopal seal this 8th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1843, and in the thirteenth year of our consecration.

"J. H. GLOUCESTER AND BRISTOL."

III. THE DOCTRINE RELATING TO CONTRACTS OF MARRIAGE, AS CONTRADISTINGUISHED FROM MARRIAGE ITSELF.

The doctrine relating to contracts of marriage, as contradistinguished from marriage itself, has been hitherto involved in great obscurity, but the following judgment of Lord Chief Justice Tindal, in the case of The Queen v. Millis (Wr. Err.), and in the case of The Queen v. Carroll (Wr. Err.), (Dom. Proc. 7 Julii, 1843,) has seemingly embodied all the ecclesiastical learning of which the question is susceptible.

Lord Chief Justice Tindal: "My lords, the first question which your lordships have proposed to her majesty's judges is the following:—'A. and B. entered into a present contract of marriage per verba de presenti in Ireland, in the house and in the presence of a placed and regular minister of the congregation of the protestant dissenters called Presbyterians; A. was a member of the established church of England and Ireland; B. was not a Roman catholic, but either a member of the established church or a protestant dissenter; a religious ceremony of marriage was performed on the occasion by the said minister between the parties according to the usual form of the presbyterian church in Ireland; A. and B., after the said contract and ceremony, cohabited and lived together for two years as man and wife; A. afterwards, and while B. was living, married C. in England;—did A. by the marriage in England commit the crime of bigamy?"

"In order that your lordships should apprehend clearly the grounds of our answer to this question, we think it will be convenient to consider, in the first instance, separately, the general and abstract question, What was the nature and obligatory force of a contract of marriage per verba de presenti, by the English common law, previous to the passing of the Marriage Act, 26 George 2? and that we should then consider the same question with reference to the particular conditions and circumstances with which it has been submitted for our opinion.

"My lords, the abstract question we propose first to consider is one involved in much obscurity; and if Serjeant Maynard, the most learned lawyer of his day, was compelled to state, in a debate on the commitment of the Marriage Bill passed by the parliament in the time of the Commonwealth, (see 2d vol. Burton's Diary, 337,) 'that the law lies very loose as to things that are naturally essential to marriages, as to pre-contracts and dissolving marriages;' and if Lord Chief Justice Holt and other eminent judges have since been found to express themselves with considerable uncertainty upon the same subject; it may well become us, the judges of England of the present day, when for nearly a century the whole doctrine relating to contracts of marriage, as contradistinguished from marriage itself, has become nearly a dead letter in our courts, to confess the subject is involved in still deeper obscurity than in the time of our predecessors, and to acknowledge ourselves unable to trace out and define the boundary between the contract and marriage itself with absolute certainty. Indeed the learning and ingenuity which have been brought to bear on the subject, as well by the judges of her majesty's court of Queen's Bench in Ireland, amongst whom a difference of opinion has prevailed, as by the counsel at your lordships' bar, upon the argument of this case, is a proof that arguments of great weight, and authorities of what is impossible to deny the application to the subject matter of controversy, may be advanced on either side of this disputed proposition.

"In this state of the question, it is only after considerable fluctuation and doubt in the minds of some of my brethren that they have acceded to the opinion which was framed by the majority of the judges upon hearing the argument at your lordships' bar, and that I am now authorised to offer to your lordships as our unanimous opinion, that by the law of England, as it existed at the time of the passing of the Marriage Act, a contract of marriage per verba de presenti was a contract indissoluble between the parties themselves, affording to either of the contracting parties, by application to the spiritual court, the power of compelling the solemnisation of an actual marriage; but that such contract never constituted a full and complete marriage in itself, unless made in the presence and with the intervention of a minister in holy orders.

"It will appear, no doubt, upon referring to the different authorities, that at various periods of our history there have been decisions as to the nature and description of the religious solemnities necessary for the completion of a perfect marriage which cannot be reconciled together; but there will be found no authority to contravene the general position, that at all times, by the common law of England, it was essential to the constitution of a full and complete marriage, that there must be some religious solemnity; that both modes of obligation should exist together, the civil and the religious; that, besides the civil contract, that is, the contract per verba de presenti, which has always remained the same, there has at all times been also a religious ceremony, which has not always remained the same, but has varied from time to time, according to the variation of the laws of the church; with respect to which ceremony it is to be observed, that whatever at any time has been held by the law of the church to be a sufficient religious ceremony of marriage, the same has at all times satisfied the common law of England in that respect. If, for example, in early times, as appears to have been the case, from the Saxon laws cited in the course of the argument, the presence of a man present was required by the church; and if, at another time, the celebration in a church, and with previous publication of banns, has been declared necessary by the ecclesiastical law; and, lastly, if, since the time of the Reformation, the church held a deacon competent to officiate at a regular marriage ceremony; with each of these modes of solemnisation the courts of common law have given themselves no concern, but have altogether acquiesced therein, leaving such matters to the sole jurisdiction of the spiritual court. So that, where the church has held, as it often has done, down to the time of passing the Marriage Act, that a marriage celebrated by a minister in holy orders, but not in a church, or by such minister in a church, but without publication of banns and without licence, to be irregular, and to render the parties liable to ecclesiastical censures, but sufficient, nevertheless, to constitute the religious part of the obligation, and that the marriage was valid, notwithstanding such irregularity, the law of the land has followed the spiritual court in that respect, and held such marriage to be valid. But it will not be found, (which is the main consideration to be attended to,) in any period of our history, either that the church of England has held the religious celebration sufficient to constitute a valid marriage, unless it was performed in the presence of an ordained minister, nor that the common law has held a marriage complete without such celebration.

"My lords, in endeavouring to show the grounds upon which we hold that such is the common law of this realm, I shall first consider the decisions which have taken place in our courts of common law, as to which, it is scarcely necessary to say, that decisions of the courts of common law are at once the best expositors and the surest evidence of the common law itself. I shall next advert to certain statutes passed by the legislature at various periods, tending to throw light upon the obscure subject now under discussion, and which appear to confirm the opinion which we have formed; and, lastly, shall call attention to the doctrine of the king's ecclesiastical law, as established and administered in this country, by which alone, and not by the general canon law of Europe, still less by the civil, are the marriages of the queen's subjects regulated and governed.

"And with respect to the decisions of the courts of law and the other common law authorities, if no case can be referred to directly and distinctly laying it down as law, in so many words, that a contract per verba de presenti alone, and without the intervention of a minister in orders, is not sufficient to create a valid and complete marriage, yet such conclusion is necessary from many of the decided cases, and is inconsistent with none, nor in fact could the difficulty to be determined in any of the cases ever have existed, except upon the supposition that some religious ceremony was necessary to the contract, thus leading to the conclusion above laid down, that by the law of England the contract per verba de presenti alone, did not constitute a full and complete marriage.

"And in referring to these authorities I do not propose to take up each in succession which has been brought in review before your lordships; it will be sufficient to support the conclusion above stated to call attention to those which are the most important, and more especially to those of earlier date, as deserving the greater weight.

"The earliest case referred to in the argument is the note from Lord Hale's manuscripts, to be found in Coke, Littleton, 33 a., n. 10; that case is, that A. contracts per verba de presenti with B., and has issue by her, and afterwards marries C. in facie ecclesiæ: B. recovers A. for her husband by sentence of the ordinary, and for not performing the sentence he is excommunicated, and afterwards enfeoffs D., and then marries B. in facie ecclesiæ, and dies. B. brings dower against D., and recovers, because the feoffment was per fraudem mediate between the sentence and the solemn marriage, 'sed reversatur coram rege et concilio quia predictus A. non fuit seistus,' during the espousals between him and B. Note—'Neither the contract nor the sentence was a marriage.'

"My lords, the curia regis et concilii, before which the reversal took place, appears, according to the researches of antiquarians, to have been in the time of Edward the First a tribunal of appeal in cases of difficulty, and to have consisted at that time of the chancellor, the treasurer, and barons of the exchequer, the judges of either bench, and other functionaries, which court of the concilium regis was perfectly distinct from the commune concilium regni, the probable original of the English parliament.

"Lord Hale speaks largely of this court in his treatise on the jurisdiction of the House of Lords, and various references to and extracts from its proceedings are to be found in the learned Introduction to the Rotuli Litterarum Clausarum, lately published by the record commissioners. The judgment, therefore, of such a court of error, is of the highest weight. Lord Hale's observation on the case is, 'that the sentence was not a marriage;' in making which observation he is probably alluding to a question which, about the time he was making his collection of notes, was a matter of contest in Westminster Hall; viz., whether the man and woman were not complete husband and wife by the sentence of the spiritual court, without any other solemnity; as it appears in Payne's case, (1 Siderfin, 13, in the year 1660,) that Mr. Attorney-General Noy had affirmed such to be the law, whilst Twisden, Justice, denied it, saying that the marriage must be solemnized before they were complete husband and wife.

"The result, however, of the case above referred to, is, that in the judgment of the court of error there was no complete marriage until after the actual solemnization of the marriage under the sentence of the court; and upon the ground that the husband enfeoffed D. before such solemnization, there was no seisin in him during the marriage, and therefore no dower. But the object at present is, to learn from the case whether, in the opinion of the court, the contract per verba de presenti did alone constitute a marriage; and both from the judgment of the court below and of the court of error the conclusion appears inevitable, that each court thought such contract alone did not constitute marriage; for the case sets out with stating, that 'A. contracts with B. per verba de presenti, and if this contract had alone constituted marriage then was there seisin in the husband during the marriage and before the feoffment to D., and the reason given by each of the courts for their respective judgments would have failed. Observe, also, the difference of language employed in the statement of the facts of the case; the contract per verba de presenti; the subsequent statement that A. married B.; the contract; and the subsequent reason by the court of error, that there was no seisin during the espousals. Can the expressions of contract on the one hand, and of marriage and espousals on the other, possibly be considered as synonymous, and referring to the same obligation? And this agrees expressly with Hale's inference from the case, 'that the contract is not a marriage.'

'Forscroft's case, (1 Rolle's Abridgment, 359,) which appears to have been in the same year, is next in order. 'R., being infirm, and in his bed, was married to A., by the Bishop of London, privately, in no church or chapel, nor with the celebration of any mass, the said A. being then pregnant by the said R., and afterwards, within twelve weeks after the marriage, the said A. is delivered of a son, and adjudged a bastard, and so the land escheated to the lord by the death of R. without heir.' Now it is to be observed that this case must have been decided upon the usual plea of bastardy in a real action; the writ must have been sent in the usual form by the court of law to the ordinary; the certificate also returned by him in the usual form. Bracton, in book 5, chapter 19, gives various instances of the proceedings in cases of bastardy with the greatest possible minuteness, and, amongst others, that in s. 11 probably would be the form applicable to this particular case; viz., 'an pater suus desponsavit matrem suam;' and it could not have been until after the certificate of the ordinary, affirming or denying the marriage, that the judgment of the court could be given. Let it be conceded that the ordinary certified in this instance the marriage to be void, which, according to the ecclesiastical law, as then in force in England, he ought to have found good, but irregular only, and exposing the parties to ecclesiastical censures, and let it be further conceded that the court of common law acted upon such finding, and gave judgment against the demandant, as indeed it could not do otherwise, still the weight of this authority on the question before us remains the same. Was a contract per verba de presenti, without anything more, held at that time to be a complete marriage? is the question. If it was, the ordinary must have returned that R. had married A.; for no doubt has been or can be raised, that when the Bishop of London married the two parties, as stated in the case, he married them per verba de presenti. If, therefore, the contract per verba de presenti had by the law of England then made a marriage, the parties were actually married; but if the ordinary finds the marriage bad, even where the ceremony was performed by a bishop, because celebrated at an improper place, the inference appears irresistible, that some religious ceremony was necessary, and that words of present contract alone did not at that time, by the law of England, constitute a marriage.

'Del Heila's case, 34 Edward 1, is precisely the same in its leading facts, and in the conclusion at which the court of common law arrives, that a contract per verba de presenti, even before the parish point, was not sufficient; but the concluding words of the record are too strong to be passed over in silence:—'Quantum fuit et aliquo spualis in facie ecclesie inter eos celebrata fuerunt postquam predictus Johannes convuluit de predicta infirmitate. Dicitur quod non. Et quia convictum est per omnes istam quod predictus Johannes Del Heila nunquam desponsavit predictam Katharinam in facie ecclesie per quod sequitur quod predictus W. filius Johannis nihil juris clares potest in predictis tenementis sed in misericordia pro falso clamore.'

'The conclusion to be drawn from the comparison of two cases to be found in 1st Rolle's Abridgment, 360, leads to the same inference, that the contract per verba de presenti was not a complete marriage in the time of Henry 6. The first is at F., plenum 1. 'A man who hath a wife takes another wife, and hath issue by her; this issue is bastard by both laws, (that is, the common law and the ecclesiastical law,) for the second marriage is void.' On the same page he lays it down, in G., placitum 1, a divorce causa præcontractus bastardizes the issue. the same case, in the Year Book, 18th Hen. 6, 34, being cited for both positions. But if the contract alone makes the marriage—if it is itself ipsum matrimonium,—where is the necessity for a divorce in the second case to bastardize the issue, which it is admitted is not necessary in the former case. They cannot be reconciled together, except upon the supposition that 'having a wife' and 'taking a wife,' that is, 'actual marriage,' was at that time held to be one thing, and 'a contract of marriage' another, falling short of the marriage itself. The authority of Perkins, section 306, (who from his edition of the Year Books may be placed conveniently amongst the decisions of the courts of law,) is to the same effect. 'If a man seized of land in fee make a contract of matrimony with I. S., and he die before the marriage is solemnized between them, she shall not have dower, for she never was his wife.' Fectum. indeed, goes on to say, in the same edition, 'and it hath been holden in the time of King Henry III. that if a woman had been married in a chamber that she should not have dower by the common law; but the law is contrary at this day.' But, whatever is his opinion of the alteration of the law as to the case of the private marriage, (by which he probably meant the ecclesiastical law as to the solemnities requisite, which in fact had been altered,) still it has no relation to his first position, which is full, complete, and express to the very point now under consideration. His observation amounts to no more than this, that in Henry the Third's time a marriage was held void which in his day (the reign of Queen Elizabeth) would be held irregular only; and, further, the observation is strong, that Perkins must have meant a different thing by the two phrases, 'contract of matrimony' and 'marrying in the chamber;' and what other difference can be suggested, except that the one was a contract by words only, the other a contract accompanied by a religious ceremony?

"Again the doctrine laid down by Perkins, title Feoffments, placitum 194, (for which he cites the Year Book, 38 Edward 3, 12,) shows the diversity at that time of day between a contract and a marriage. 'If a contract of marriage be between a man and a woman, yet one of them may enfeoff the other, for yet they are not one person in law, inasmuch as if the woman dieth before the marriage solemnized betwixt them, the man unto whom she was contracted shall not have the goods of the wife as her husband, but the wife thereof may make a will without the agreement of him unto whom she was contracted, &c.,' and at the close of the next placitum he says, 'but after the marriage celebrated between a man and a woman the man cannot enfeoff his wife, for then they are as one person in law.' Bracton, in book 2, chapter 9, entitled, 'Si vir uxori donationem facere possit constante matrimonio,' may be thought to leave the matter in some doubt whether such gifts would be good even after the contract, as he says, 'Matrimonium autem accipi possit sive sit publice contractum vel fides data quod separari non possunt; et reversa donationes inter virum et uxorem constante matrimonio valere non debent.' Now, even if it is considered that by the fides data Bracton understood a contract per verba de presenti, without any solemnity, it is enough to say he could not be writing as a common lawyer (in fact he was a civilian) when he is found to differ from the authority of the Year Books.

"The case of Bunting v. Lepingwell, (Moore, 27 and 28 Elizabeth,) is of great weight, and of immediate bearing upon the point in question. Taking the facts from the two reporters, (Moore, 169, and 4 Coke, 29 a.) it appears that Bunting and Agnes Adishall contracted matrimony between them per verba de presenti tempore, and afterwards Agnes took to husband Thomas Twede, and cohabited with him, and afterwards Bunting sued Agnes in the court of Audience, and proved the contract, and the sentence was pronounced, 'Quod prædicta Agnes subiret matrimonium cum præfato Bunting, et in super pronuntiatur decretum et declaratum fuit dictum matrimonium fore nullum, &c.,' which marriage between Bunting and Agnes took place according to the sentence, and they had issue one Charles Bunting; and whether Charles Bunting was son and heir was the question for the jury in an action of trespass brought by him, and the court held him legitimate, and no bastard. The argument before the court turned principally on the invalidity of the sentence of the spiritual court, by reason of Twede, the husband de facto, not being made a party to the proceedings by which his marriage was declared null; the court, however, holding themselves bound to give credit to the spiritual court that their proceedings were regular. But the bearing of the case upon the point now under discussion is, whether it establishes a distinction between the contract to marry and 'ipsam matrimonium,' and such seems the necessary inference. This was a trial before the judges of the common law, who called for the assistance of civil lawyers to argue the case before them, but who must be supposed to know themselves what was the common law; and if the contract per verba de presenti between Bunting and Agnes had been what the common law had then recognised as an actual marriage, the second marriage would have been held void without any controversy, no doubt would have existed, and no civilian would have been consulted, any more than if it had been a marriage celebrated in facie ecclesiæ. It is also not unworthy of remark, that the sentence of the spiritual court, 'Quod prædicta Agnes subiret matrimonium cum præfato Bunting,' proves that not even by the ecclesiastical law, as administered in England, was such contract held to constitute a complete marriage without the intervention of the religious ceremony.

"The case of Wild v. Chamberlayne, 2d Shower, page 300, is so far of importance as it affords direct proof that in the opinion of Chief Justice Pemberton on the trial of an issue, 'marriage or no marriage,' words of contract de presenti tempore, repeated after a person in orders, was a good marriage, for it was only by importunity of counsel a case was to be made thereof. If such a contract, alone and unaccompanied by a religious ceremony, had been a marriage, surely the case would have been decided on a shorter ground, and the objections, that the parson was an ejected minister, and that the ring was not used at the ceremony, according to the ritual of the church of England, would never have been urged.

"In the case of Haydon v. Gould, 1 Sal-keld, 119, Haydon and his wife were Sabbatarians, and married by one of their ministers in a Sabbatarian congregation, using the form of the Common Prayer, except the ring; but the minister was a mere layman, and not in orders; and after administration granted to Haydon, and subsequently repealed, the court of Delegates affirmed the sentence of repeal. The reason given is, 'That Haydon, demanding a right due to him as husband by the ecclesiastical law, must prove himself a husband according to that law to entitle himself in this case.' In this case, the book adds, it is urged that this marriage was not a mere nullity, because by the law of nature it was sufficient; and though the positive law ordains it shall be by a priest, yet that makes such a marriage as this irregular only, but not void; but the court ruled ut supra, the reporter adding, that the constant form of pleading marriage is 'per presbyterum sacris ordinibus constitutum.' Perhaps the more correct expression might have been, 'per ministrum sacris ordinibus constitutum;' for, undoubtedly, after the Reformation, a marriage might be as well solemnized by a deacon as a priest.

VICT. c. 86.

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. C. 86.

But what is the whole result of the case but this, that by the English ecclesiastical law a contract of marriage per verba de presenti was not alone sufficient (for such contract there was in fact); but that by the same law, to make the marriage complete, there must be the presence and intervention of the priest? And when it is asked, as it was at your lordships' bar, what had the priest to do, or what had he to say? the answer must be, that he married them, and in doing so he used such form of words as were customary at the time of his performing the ceremony. The words of present contract found in the ritual of the church of England as established by the authority of parliament in the 2d & 3d Edward 6th, cap. 1, was not then for the first time made, but in part altered and in part retained from the former rituals which had been handed down from the greatest antiquity, just as it was declared by the council of Trent, (session 24, c. 1.) when it prescribes certain words to be used by the parish priest when performing the office of matrimony; vis., 'Ego vos in matrimonium conjungo, in nomine Patris et Filii et Spiritus Sancti.' The decree also adds, 'vel aliis utatur verbis, juxta receptam uniuscujusque provincie ritum.'

"The only remaining decision of a court of common law to which it may be necessary to refer, is the case of The Queen v. Fielding, upon an indictment for bigamy, 14 State Trials, 1327. The evidence given of the first marriage was, that the parties made a contract per verba de presenti in English, in the presence of and following the words of a priest in orders, though he was a priest in the orders of the church of Rome; and Mr. Justice Powell, in summing up the case to the jury, more than once adverts to the fact that the marriage was by a priest. 'If you believe Mrs. Villars,' he says, 'there was a marriage by a priest.' There is no reason to infer from this direction to the jury, that if the first marriage in this case had been merely a contract per verba de presenti, in the presence of a layman, the offence of bigamy must have been committed, but the inference to be drawn from the summing up of the judge is directly the reverse.

"My lords, this being the state of the decided cases, from the earliest time to the time of Queen Anne, the principal direct authority adduced on the part of the crown is the dictum of Lord Holt, in Jesson v. Collins, 2 Salkeld, 437, 'that a contract per verba de presenti was a marriage, and this is not releasable,' and the decisions which have subsequently taken place. That case came before the court upon a motion for a prohibition, upon a suggestion that the contract was in fact per verba de futuro, for which the party had remedy at common law, and the case was disposed of by the court, and the prohibition refused, upon the ground that the spiritual courts have jurisdiction of all matrimonial causes whatsoever, and that there was no reason to prohibit them, because this may be a future contract for breach of which an action at law will lie. This appears distinctly from the reports of the same case in 6 Modern, 155, and Holt's

Reports, 457. This being the state of the case, Holt, Chief Justice, in speaking to a before the court, used the expression above referred to. It is obvious, in the first place, it was unnecessary to the case before the court; for, whether present words or future words, the prohibition must equally be refused. The observation, therefore, is not entitled to the same weight and authority as if it had been the very point of the case before the court. If by the terms 'quæ matrimonium,' Lord Holt intended to lay down the position that it was so held by the common law of the land, notwithstanding its unbounded respect which all who have succeeded him have ever felt and still feel to his learning and ability, we cannot assent to his opinion. If, however, the observation was intended with reference to the civil or the canon law of Europe, then it is perfectly correct; and that such was the intention of Lord Holt we think abundantly clear from Wigmore's case, which follows the former in the same page of Salkeld, and which was decided three years later than the first. In that case the husband was an anabaptist, and had a licence from the bishop to marry, but married this woman according to the forms of their own religion. Et per Holt, C. J., 'By the canon law a contract per verba de presenti is a marriage.'

"In Holt's Reports the expression is precisely the same, 'by the canon law;' and Lord Chief Justice Holt is there made further to say, 'In the case of a dissenter married to a woman by a minister of the congregation who was not in orders, it is said that this marriage was not a nullity, because by the law of nature the contract is binding and sufficient; for though the positive law of man ordains that marriages shall be made by a priest, that law only makes this marriage irregular, and not expressly void; but marriages ought to be solemnized according to the rites of the church of England to entitle the privileges attending legal marriage, as dower, thirds, &c.' It cannot be supposed that Lord Holt would limit the observation to the canon law, as undoubtedly he did in Wigmore's case, if it had been unsuitable in the larger and unqualified extent supposed to have been stated by him in the case of Jesson v. Collins; and if the latter statement agrees with all the authorities, and the former is not, as we conceive, supported by or consistent with them, we are bound to mix either that there is some error in the reporter, or that he really meant the proposition to be limited to its more restrained sense.

"My lords, this dictum of Lord Chief Justice Holt is of the more importance, because it appears to have been the origin of all the subsequent opinions expressed by different judges to the same effect. When Sir William Scott lays it down as the law recognised by the temporal courts of the kingdom, he cites this dictum of Lord Chief Justice Holt, which he observes (so he is justified in doing by the report in 6 Modern) was agreed to by the whole bench. When Gibbs, Chief Justice, makes the same observation, he expressly relies on the authority of Sir William Scott, (Lantour v. Teesdale, 8 Taunton, 832.) When Lord Kenyon makes a similar observation, probably on the same authority, observe how carefully he guards himself. 'I think,' he says, 'though I do not speak meaning to be bound, that even an agreement between the parties per verba de presenti is ipsum matrimonium.' (Reed v. Passer and others, Peake's Nisi Prius, N. P., 303.) When Lord Ellenborough lays down the same doctrine in Res v. The Inhabitants of Brompton, 10 East, 289,—he is giving judgment in a case of a marriage per verba de presenti celebrated by a priest, (though whether Roman catholic or protestant, he says does not appear,)—and when he refers to the authority of Holt, chief justice, it is clear he considered Lord Holt to have been speaking of a marriage through the intervention of a priest. It is therefore of very great importance to estimate justly the weight of Lord Holt's observation when contrasted with the large field of authorities which has been opened, upon which authorities I have been longer occupied, because the question whereon we are called to answer depends upon the common law of England, of which the ecclesiastical law forms a part.

"It will be improper, however, to close the discussion of this part of the case without adverting to an argument urged at your lordships' bar, upon which some reliance appears to have been placed, namely, the state of the marriages of quakers, (all doubt as to which marriages is now set at rest by the statute passed in 1835,) and of jews.

"The argument in substance was this, that, as the persons professing the opinions of those respective persuasions celebrated their marriages according to their own peculiar rites, which necessarily excluded the intervention of a person in holy orders, according to the sense which those words are asserted to convey, and as their marriages have been held legal with respect (as it is argued) to all the consequences attending marriage, such as legitimacy, administration, and other civil rights, so the validity of such marriages can only be grounded upon the assumption that a contract of marriage per verba de presenti did by law constitute the marriage itself.

"Since the passing of the Marriage Act it has generally been supposed, that the exception contained therein as to the marriages of quakers and jews amounted to a tacit acknowledgment by the legislature that a marriage solemnized with the religious ceremonies which they were respectively known to adopt ought to be considered sufficient; but before the passing of that act, when the question was left perfectly open, we find no case in which it has been held that a marriage between quakers was a legal marriage, on the ground that it was a marriage by a contract per verba de presenti; but, on the contrary, the inference is strong, that they were never considered legal. The legislature, in the statute 6th & 7th William the Third, chapter 6th, section 63, enacts, that all quakers and jews, and any other persons who should cohabit and live together as man and wife, should pay the duty thereby imposed on marriages, and that upon every pretended marriage made by them they should give five days' notice; with an express provision in the 64th section, that nothing in the act contained should be construed 'to make good or effectual in law any such marriage or pretended marriage, but that they should be of the same force and virtue, and no other, as if the act had not been made.' And the case before Lord Hale, to which so much weight was attributed, as conveying his opinion that the marriage was good, appears rather to show his opinion to have been the reverse. He declared, 'that he was not willing, on his own opinion, to make their children bastards, and gave directions to the jury to find it special;' a declaration which plainly intimates that the inclination of his own mind was that the marriage was not good. We cannot, therefore, think that the case of the quakers, although certainly one which it is difficult altogether to dispose of, amounts to such a difficulty as to induce us to alter the opinion founded on the authority of the decided cases.

"And as to the case of the jews, it is well known that in early times they stood in a very peculiar and excepted condition. For many centuries they were treated, not as natural-born subjects, but as foreigners, and scarcely recognised as participating in the civil rights of other subjects of the crown. The ceremony of marriage by their own peculiar forms might therefore be regarded as constituting a legal marriage, without affording any argument as to the nature of a contract of marriage per verba de presenti between other subjects. But even in the case of a jewish marriage, it was more than a mere contract; it was a religious ceremony of marriage; and the case of Lindo v. Bellisario is so far from being an authority that a mere contract was a good marriage, that the marriage was held void precisely because part of the religious ceremony held necessary by the jewish law was found to have been omitted.

"I proceed now to refer to certain statutes passed by the legislature at different times, from various enactments and expressions in which statutes the inference appears to follow, that a mere contract per verba de presenti could not at those several times have been generally held to constitute complete marriage.

"The statute 32d Henry the Eighth, chapter 38, for marriages to stand notwithstanding pre-contracts, in its preamble gives no support to the doctrine, that by the law of England the contract per verba de presenti was an actual marriage. It recites the mischief, that after divers marriages have been solemnized and consummated, and fruit of children, 'nevertheless, by an unjust law of the Bishop of Rome, which is that upon pretence of a former contract made and not consummate, the same were divorced and separate,' and then proceeds to enact, that every marriage, being contracted and solemnized in face of the church, and consummated, or with fruit of children, shall be deemed lawful, good, and indissoluble, not-

VICT. c. 86.

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

withstanding any pre-contract not consummate which either party shall have before made.

"The statute 2d and 3d Edward the Sixth, chapter 23, enacts, that, as concerning pre-contracts, 'the former statute should be repealed, and be reduced to the state and order of the king's ecclesiastical laws of this realm,' (an expression of no slight importance, when considered with reference to the force within this kingdom of the general canon law of Europe,) 'which before the making of the said statute were used in this realm, so that, when any cause or contract of marriage is pretended to have been made, it shall be lawful to the king's ecclesiastical judge of that place to hear and examine the said cause, and (having the said contract sufficiently and lawfully proved before him,) to give sentence for matrimony, commanding solemnization, cohabitation,' &c. The language of the legislature in this act does surely imply a marked and acknowledged distinction between contract and matrimony. To refer, next, to the statutes passed relating to the marriages of priests, the 31st Henry the Eighth, chapter 14, punishes with death any priest who shall carnally keep or use any woman 'to whom he is or shall be married, or with whom he hath contracted matrimony,' thus assuming the contract to be one thing, actual matrimony to be another, although visiting both offences with the same measure of punishment.

"The statute 12th Charles the Second, chapter 33, entitled, 'An Act for Confirmation of Marriages,' enacts, 'that all marriages had and solemnized after a certain day before any justice of the peace, shall be adjudged and taken to be of the same and of no other force and effect as if such marriage had been had and solemnized according to the rites and ceremonies established or used in the church or kingdom of England. It is true that act is declared to be passed 'for the preventing and avoiding all doubts and questions touching the same;' but as the act or ordinance referred to contained a form of contract per verba de presenti of the most accurate and precise description, and before witnesses, it affords ground to infer that a contract of that nature had not, in the general opinion, the force of an actual marriage; and observe how very strong the inference is from the proviso, 'that issues on the point of bastardy or lawfulness of marriage, depending on these marriages, should be tried by a jury.' Why not let them go to the ecclesiastical court, as before, if by the law of that court the contract per verba de presenti was held an actual marriage without any religious ceremony?

"The statute 7th and 8th William the Third, chapter 35, passed to enforce the laws which restrain marriages without licence or banns, had for its object the levying a revenue by the stamps imposed by a former act upon licences of marriages. For this purpose it lays a penalty of 10*l.* by the 4th section, 'on every man so married without licence or publication of banns as aforesaid;' that is, upon reference to the preceding clause, 'married by any parson, vicar, curate, or other minister as their substitute.' If the legislature had thought a contract per verba de presenti before any person not being in holy orders was a valid marriage, it surely would not have left the remedy so defective, but would have enacted that every man married without a licence shall be made liable to the penalty.

"The statute 10 Anne, chap. 19, is an act for raising money for the use of the kingdom; and in section 176 provision is made to prevent the great loss of duties on marriage licences which had been sustained by the frequency of clandestine marriages. The provision is, that every person, vicar, or curate, or other person in holy orders, who shall after a certain day marry any person in any church or chapel, or in any other place whatsoever, without publication of banns, or without licence first had from the proper ordinary, for such marriage, shall forfeit 10*l.* Would this penalty have been limited to the case of marriage by a person in holy orders, if it had been conceived by the framers of the act that a contract per verba de presenti alone, without the aid of the priest, had constituted a complete marriage? The inference arising from these acts is not certainly so very strong, but whatever inference can be drawn has a tendency to support the opinion at which we have arrived.

"The various acts of parliament which have been passed from time to time, and which have been referred to in the course of the argument, imposing penalties on the solemnization of marriages by Roman catholic priests in Ireland between protestants, or between a protestant and a Roman catholic, and nullifying such marriages, are founded in good sense, and with a view to attain a definite object, upon the supposition that the presence of a priest is necessary to make the marriage good, and upon that supposition only; but they are a mere dead letter, if the contract per verba de presenti without the priest makes the marriage. And if this is no proof, as perhaps it is not, that such was necessarily the law, it is at least a proof that it was the prevailing general opinion, both amongst the people and the government, that by law the presence of the priest was essential to the contract.

"But upon referring, in the last place, to the statute 26 Geo. 2, cap. 33, the act for the better preventing clandestine marriages, it will be found the provisions thereof throw a stronger light upon the subject. If a contract per verba de presenti had been considered by the legislature as 'ipsum matrimonium,' one would have expected that all such contracts made after the act came into force, if not made illegal, would at least be declared null and void. There could have been no more effectual mode of suppressing clandestine marriages, but there is no such enactment. The only clause that affects these contracts is the 13th, which enacts only, 'that no suit or proceeding shall be had in any ecclesiastical court in order to compel a celebration of any marriage in facie ecclesiæ, by reason of any contract of matrimony whatsoever, whether per verba de presenti or per verba de futuro, which shall be re-tered into after the 25th March, 1754.' These contracts per verba de presenti are still, therefore, lawful, though they cannot be enforced in an ecclesiastical court. If these contracts did not before, and at the time of passing the act, constitute a valid marriage, but were only the necessary means, the basis, for enforcing the solemnization, there is then no injury in leaving them as they were; but if they ever constituted a valid marriage of themselves, not being made null by the act, so do they still; and then may some great and almost inextricable difficulties occur from the absence of such provision.

"Before the passing of the act, and indeed since, put the case that A. made a contract of marriage per verba de presenti with B., and then, in the lifetime of B. marries C. in facie ecclesiæ, and that he has children at the same time both by C. and B.; B. dies; are the issues of both legitimate? It is clear from the decisions, that the issue of A. and C. are legitimate; and if the argument on the part of the crown, that the contract with B. makes the marriage, be well founded, the issue of B. is legitimate also. Suppose two sons, born at the same time, one from each mother, a possible event, which is the eldest son and heir? This and many more cases of difficult solution may be put, if the contract per verba de presenti was by the English law held to be actual marriage; and from these considerations arises the necessary inference, that it was not; and thus do arguments from the enactments of the legislature combine and agree with the authority of the decided cases, to prove that such never was the law of England.

"My lords, I proceed, in the last place, to endeavour to show, that the law by which the spiritual courts of this kingdom have from the earliest time been governed and regulated is not the general canon law of Europe, imported as a body of law into this kingdom, and governing those courts proprio vigore, but, instead thereof, an ecclesiastical law, of which the general canon law is no doubt the basis, but which has been modified and altered from time to time by the ecclesiastical constitutions of our archbishops and bishops, and by the legislature of the realm, and which has been known from early times by the distinguishing title of the king's ecclesiastical law. And if it shall appear, upon reference to this law, that there is no incontrovertible authority to be found therein that marriage was held to be complete before actual celebration by a priest, the absence of such direct authority in the affirmative is sufficient to justify us in drawing the conclusion already formed, that the contract alone is not by the law of England the actual marriage. The result, however, of a somewhat hasty consideration of the authorities upon this question, (for the due research into which we were anxious to have obtained a longer time,) appears to us to be, that no such rule obtained in the spiritual courts in this kingdom.

"It would scarcely have been necessary to have entered upon this part of the discussion, had it not been for the observations made by Sir William Scott, in the case of Dalrymple v. Dalrymple. That very learned judge, after laying down in his deservedly celebrated judgment in that case, that marriage is a contract of natural law and of civil law also, proceeds to observe, 'that when the natural and civil contract was formed, the law of the church, the canon law, considered it had the full essence of matrimony, without the intervention of the priest,' which canon law is then stated by that eminent judge to be 'the known basis of the matrimonial law of Europe.' The observation upon which so much reliance has been placed by the counsel for the crown then follows: 'that the same doctrine is recognised by the temporal courts as the existing rule of the matrimonial law of this country,' although certainly the observation is in some degree qualified by the expression, 'that the common law had scruples in applying the civil rights of dower and community of goods and legitimacy in the cases of these looser species of marriage.'

"My lords, as we have already stated in the opinion we have given, that we do not conceive it to be part of the law of the temporal courts, that 'when the natural and civil contract was formed it had the full essence of matrimony without the intervention of the priest,' it is only proper to state, in the first place, that the entertaining, as we do, a different view of this subject from that eminent judge, does not in any manner whatever break in upon the authority of the decision in the case of Dalrymple v. Dalrymple.

"The doctrine of the temporal courts in England had no bearing at all upon a question which was to be decided solely by the law of Scotland, which country, it is well known, differs materially from ours in many of its legal institutions, and in none more pointedly than those which relate to marriage and legitimacy. Again, it was of no importance in that case whether the canon law of Europe was introduced into England as part of the law of the land; the only question necessary for the decision of the case then before the court being, whether such canon law was introduced or not into the law of Scotland. The opinion, therefore, of that eminent person, so far as regards England, was uncalled for and extra-judicial, and upon that ground the question before us must be considered as unfettered by the weight of such great authority, and open to the most free discussion.

"But that the canon law of Europe does not, and never did, as a body of laws, form part of the law of England, has been long settled and established law. Lord Hale defines the extent to which it is limited very accurately. 'The rule,' he says, 'by which they proceed is the canon law, but not in its full latitude, and only so far as it stands uncorrected either by contrary acts of parliament or the common law and custom of England, for there are divers canons made in ancient times and decretals of the popes that never were admitted here in England.' Hale's History of Common Law, cap. 2.

"Indeed, the authorities are so numerous, and at the same time so express, that it is not by the Roman canon law that our judges in the spiritual courts decide questions within their jurisdiction, but by the king's ecclesiastical law, that it is sufficient to refer to two as an example of the rest. In Caudrey's case, 5 Coke 1, which is entitled 'of the king's ecclesiastical law,' in reporting the third resolution of the judges, Lord Coke says, 'As in temporal causes the king, by the mouth of the judges in his courts of justice, doth judge and determine the same by the temporal laws of England, so in cases ecclesiastical and spiritual, as namely,' (amongst others enumerated,) 'rights of matrimony, the same are to be determined and decided by ecclesiastical judges according to the king's ecclesiastical law of this realm;' and a little further he adds, 'So, albeit the kings of England derived their ecclesiastical laws from others, yet so many as were proved, approved, and allowed here, by and with a general consent, are aptly and rightly called "the king's ecclesiastical laws of England."'

STAT. 3 & 4

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

In the next place, Sir John Davies, in his Reports, page 69, 'Le Case de Commendams,' shows how the canon law was first introduced into England, and fixes the time of such introduction about the year 1290, and lays it down thus: 'Those canons which were received, allowed, and used in England, were made by such allowance and usage part of the king's ecclesiastical laws of England, whereby the interpretation, dispensation, or execution of those canons, having become laws of England, belong solely to the king of England and his magistrates within his dominions;' and in page 72 he adds, 'yet all the ecclesiastical laws of England were not derived and adopted from the court of Rome; for long before the canon law was authorized and published,' (which was after the Norman Conquest, as before shown,) 'the ancient kings of England, viz. Edgar, Athelstane, Alfred, Edward the Confessor, and others, did, with the advice of their clergy within the realm, make divers ordinances for the government of the church of England, and after the Conquest divers provincial synods were held, and many constitutions were made in both the kingdoms of England and Ireland, all which are part of our ecclesiastical laws of this day.'

"We therefore can see no possible ground of objection to the inquiry, whether before the introduction of the canon law any law existed upon the subject of marriage differing from that of the canon law, and not afterwards superseded thereby; and when we find, in the collection of ancient laws and institutes of England published by the commissioners of public records, amongst the laws of Edmund, one which directs that at the nuptials there shall be a mass priest by law, who shall 'with God's blessing bind the union to all posterity,' we can see no more ground to doubt the existence of this law, (which does not now make its appearance for the first time, but was published by Wilkin in the last century,) than any other document of antiquity which has been received as genuine without hesitation.

"The council held at Winchester in the time of Archbishop Lanfranc, in the year 1076, (see Wilkin's Concilia, 367, and Johnson's Collection,) contains a direct and express authority with a nullifying clause, that a marriage without the benediction of the priest should not be a legitimate marriage, and that other marriages should be deemed fornication. Numerous councils follow, in which are decrees to prevent and punish clandestine marriages, but in no one of which is there any repeal, express or implied, of the rule laid down by the first, viz., that the presence of the priest is necessary to constitute a legitimate marriage; but the time of the marriage by the priest, the place where it is to be celebrated, and other regulations, are prescribed, in order to meet the evil which was then existing. That the marriage, though called clandestine, was still a marriage celebrated by a priest, and is assumed to be, is placed beyond all doubt by the 11th Constitution of Archbishop Stanford, established by the council of London, (see 2 Wilkin's Concilia, 706,) 'De celebrationibus matrimonia clandestina in ecclesiis exterioris vel capellis.' That Constitution recurs in effect, that people left their own places of residence, where the impediments to their marriage were notorious, and their parish priests not disposed to solemnize their marriage, and betook themselves to populous places where they were unknown, in order that 'aliquoties in ecclesiis aliquando in capellis seu oratoriis matrimonia inter ipsos de facto solemnizari procurent.' What is this but a plain assumption, that the marriage so celebrated was celebrated by a priest, for surely none others but persons in holy orders could celebrate them in churches, chapels, or oratories?

"The authority of John de Burgo, a denitatory of the church of England, was much relied on, as a direct proof that a contract per verba de presentis was sufficient to constitute complete matrimony, without the presence or intervention of a priest. The materials of his work, bearing the quaint title of Papilla Oculi, were compiled in 1385, and the work itself printed at Paris; but afterwards, in the year 1400, an edition was printed in London, 'Omnibus presbyteris precipue Anglicanis summe necessaria.' The work contains, amongst other things, a treatise on the administration of the seven sacraments; and under the head 'De sacramento matrimoniali' occurs the passage relied on by the crown. The author lays it down, 'Of the minister of this sacrament it is to be observed, that no other minister is to be required distinct from the parties contracting, for they themselves for the most part minister this sacrament to themselves, either the one to the other, or each to themselves.' And a little further he adds, 'Secus est, quod ad conferendum huius sacramenti non est requisita ministeria alicuius alicuius, sed quod sacerdos benedictionem quam sacerdos wont to make or utter upon married people, or other prayers uttered by him, are not the form of the sacrament nor of its essence, but something sacramental pertaining to the adorning of the sacrament.' From this passage it is clear, that, whether ablutely necessary or not, it was at least usual and customary at that time to make the contract before the priest. It appears further, from the first words of the following chapter, 'De matrimonio clandestino,' that such course was ordered by the church: 'Inhibitum est contrahere nuptias occulte sed publice coram sacerdote sunt nuptiæ in Domino contrahendæ.' If, therefore, in the passage above cited, the author intends to express thus much only, and no more, viz., that by the contract per verba de presenti, made privately between themselves, that mysterious sacrament of which he is speaking has been taken by them which makes the contract indissoluble, and capable of being enforced by either against the other in facie ecclesiæ, such doctrine is admitted to be consistent with the ecclesiastical law received in England; but if it is supposed to mean more,—if it is held up as an authority that the marriage is complete for all civil purposes of legitimacy, dower, and other civil rights, then before we accede to the proposition, it is the safer course to discover, if possible, whether the doctrine of the text writer is or is not consistent with the recognised laws and constitutions of the church of England then in force, and with the course and practice of the ecclesiastical courts of England at that time; and in case of a discrepancy between them, to reject the authority of the text writer, and to adhere to that of the recognised law and the practice of the courts; for there is no surer evidence of the law in any particular case than the course and practice of the courts in which such law is administered. We should treat the best of our text writers, Sir William Blackstone, for example, precisely in the same way.

"Now, at the time of the publication of John de Burgo, and of the other work, entitled Manipulus Curatorum, cited for the same purpose, there stood, unrepealed by any subsequent constitution of the church, both the Constitution of Lanfranc, before stated, and the subsequent Constitutions of the church against clandestine marriages, the former directly declaring the presence of the priest at the marriage to be necessary to give it validity; the latter implying such necessity. I ask, whether the courts of ecclesiastical law of England would take the law, if the very point in controversy was brought before them, from the text writers of the day, or from the Constitutions of the church? I doubt not, however learned, or in whatever estimation the text writers might be, it would be from the law of the church; and as to the course and practice of the courts of ecclesiastical law in respect to a matrimonial suit to enforce marriage upon a contract per verba de presenti, the prayer upon the libel has seen, not to pronounce that the parties are already actually and completely married, but that it may be pronounced 'for the validity, full force, and strength of the said contract of marriage to all effects and intents in law whatsoever; and that the defendant may be compelled to solemnize the said marriage in the face of the church,' (Clerk's Instructor, 326,) just as in Bunting's case, before cited, the decree was not that Agnes was married, but that Agnes 'matrimonium subiret.

"And when reference is made to Oughton, (vol. i. 283,) the same appears more distinctly to be the form of proceedings; and it would be most singular, if the contract per verba de presenti was considered by the court as an actual complete marriage, that a provision should be made for the court to inhibit the party, 'pendente lite, from contracting matrimony, or procuring matrimony to be solemnized.' If the court held the first marriage to be entirely complete, surely the statute of James, which had then been passed more than a century, and which made the second solemnization a felony, would have been a surer protection than the inhibition of the court. But the necessary inference is, that the court could not have so held the effect of the contract; and it follows, therefore, that the authority of the passages above cited cannot be safely relied on, against the Constitutions of the church and the practice of the spiritual court.

"We now pass to the consideration of the particular circumstances involved in the first question proposed by your lordships, which supposes this marriage to have taken place in the house and in the presence of a placed and regular minister of the congregation of protestant dissenters called Presbyterians.

"As we have already stated our opinion, that to make the marriage a complete marriage, it must be solemnized in the presence of a minister in holy orders, it is only necessary to look back to the time when that law first obtained in England, to enable us to answer that question without difficulty.

"At the early period when such law arose, and down to a comparatively recent period, the expression priest, curate, minister, deacon, and person in holy orders, which are the words met with in the different Constitutions and councils and authorities bearing on the point, could point to those persons only who had received episcopal ordination; there were no others known at all; all but they were laymen; and unless some act of the legislature has interposed its authority, and given the protestant dissenting minister in Ireland the same power for this purpose as the persons in holy orders did before possess, we think the entering into the contract in his presence cannot, in the legal sense of the word, be held to be entering into it in the presence of a person 'in holy orders.' Now no statute has been brought forward, except the 21st and 22d Geo. 3, cap. 25 (Irish), but the operation of that statute is limited to matrimonial contracts or marriages between protestant dissenters, and solemnized by protestant dissenting ministers or teachers; and as your lordships' question goes on to state, that one of the contracting parties in this case is not a protestant dissenter, but a member of the established church of England and Ireland, it follows that the case does not fall within that statute, and that it must be decided as if that statute had never been passed.

"My lords, the two subsequent conditions or circumstances contained in your lordships' question can obviously make no difference. The form of the religious ceremony cannot, upon any principle or upon any authority, compensate for the want of the presence of the proper minister, assuming such presence to be necessary; nor can the circumstance of subsequent cohabitation carry the validity of the marriage higher than the original force of its obligation."

VICT. c. 86.

"The main and principal point, however, of your lordships' first question still remains to be answered; vis., whether, after such a contract entered into between A. and B., whether A. by marrying C. in England whilst B. is still living, commits the crime of bigamy.

"And after the full discussion of the general question, and our opinion already declared, that the first contract does not amount to a marriage by the common law, it is hardly necessary to say, that we hold the offence of bigamy has not been committed. Indeed, independently altogether of the answer we have given to that abstract question, and admitting, for the sake of argument, that the law had held a contract per verba de presentia to be a marriage, yet looking to the statute upon which this indictment is framed, we should have thought, upon the just interpretation of the words of that statute, the offence of bigamy could not be made out by evidence of such a marriage as this. The words are, 'If any person, being married, shall marry any other person during the life of the first husband or wife;' words which are almost the very same as those in the original statute of James the First. Now the words 'being married,' in the first clause, and the words 'marry any other person,' in the second, must of necessity point at and denote marriage of the same kind and obligation. If, therefore, a marriage per verba de presentia, without any ceremony, is good for the first marriage, it is good also for the second; but it never could be supposed that the legislature intended to visit with capital punishment, (for the offence would be capital if the plea of clergy could be counterpleaded,) the man who had in each instance entered into a contract per verba de presentia, and nothing more. Waiving, however, that consideration, it is enough to state to your lordships, as the answer to the first question, that in our opinion A. did not, under the circumstances therein stated, commit the crime of bigamy.

"My lords, we have so fully and pointedly answered the second question proposed by your lordships, in stating the grounds of our first answer, that it is unnecessary to trouble you with any further observation thereon, except, that as the statute of 58 Geo. 3, chapter 81, has enacted that no suit shall be had to compel the celebration of such a contract in any ecclesiastical court in Ireland, we think this question also should be answered in the negative.

"In conclusion, I would only observe, that although I am authorized to state our opinion on the questions proposed to us is unanimous, yet that my learned brethren are not to be held responsible for the reasoning upon which I have endeavoured to establish the validity of that opinion." [Vide post. Stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 39.]

IV. REFUSING BURIAL; AND IMPROPERLY PERFORMING THE BURIAL SERVICE.

"Convenient warning having been given him thereof before."

In Titchmarsh v. Chapman, (3 Eccles. Notes of Cases,) Sir H. Jenner Post observed: "This is a cause of office promoted by Mr. Thomas Titchmarsh against the Rev. William Herbert Chapman, for refusing to bury the corpse of an infant parishioner brought to the churchyard, convenient notice having been given to him for that purpose. It should be observed, at the outset, that this is not a proceeding under the general ecclesiastical law, but under the 68th Canon of 1603, and that the penalty which that canon imposes for the offence is suspension for three months from the ministry; it is, therefore, a particular offence under a particular canon, which fixes the penalty.

"The substance of the charge against Mr. Chapman is, that he expressly declared his determination not to bury the corpse of this child, if brought to the churchyard for burial, and that, in pursuance of such declared determination, he did, on the 26th May, 1841, contrary to his duty, refuse to bury the corpse then brought to the churchyard, 'convenient warning having been given him thereof before,' which are the words of the canon, the deceased infant having been baptized according to the form generally observed amongst the class of protestant dissenters called Independents, namely, with water, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, by a minister, preacher, or teacher of that class, he (Mr. Chapman) having been informed of the fact of such baptism, and expressly assigning as the pretext or ground for refusing to bury the corpse. It appears, therefore, that the charge is confined to what took place on the 26th May, 1841, for no other day is mentioned in the articles, except in the heading, in order that it should agree with the citation, which recites, that Mr. Chapman had a second time refused to bury this corpse, the first refusal being on the 17th February, 1840. But the charge of refusing in 1840 is dropped in the articles, and necessarily so, because, as the decree was not returned till 11th May, 1843, and the first alleged refusal was on the 17th February, 1840, more than two years had elapsed from the time of the offence, which exceeds the limits prescribed by the statute, (the Church Discipline Act,) under which these proceedings are now carried on, for the commencement of proceedings for such an offence. The charge, therefore, is simply confined to what occurred on the 26th May, 1841, and to any antecedent circumstances leading up to that occurrence, and any communications between Mr. Chapman and the father or relations of the child previous thereto.

"Now the onus probandi in this case lies on the party promoting the office of the judge; the accused is not bound to offer any plea beyond the general issue of 'not guilty,' or, in the language of these courts, to give a negative or an affirmative issue to the articles. In this case a negative issue has been given, and Mr. Chapman thereby throws upon the other party the burthen of making out his case by such evidence as it is in his power to produce. And it may be further observed, that in a criminal proceeding, and this is a criminal proceeding, the court will presume nothing; the facts must be proved by legal evidence, whether parol or documentary, and the court must pronounce its sentence secundum allegata et probata.

"The questions for the court to inquire into (according to the words of the canon) are these: Did Mr. Chapman, on the 26th May, 1841, refuse to bury the corpse of this infant, brought to the church or churchyard for burial, such infant not having been denounced excommunicate, majori excommunicatione, or within another exception specified in the rubric, (more immediately applicable to this case,) namely, not being 'unbaptized;' and was convenient warning given him thereof before?

"First, was the corpse of the child brought to the churchyard to be buried? On this point the proof is full and conclusive; no objection has been raised to it, so that it is unnecessary for the court to refer to this part of the evidence, except to observe that it appears to have been at half-past six in the afternoon that the corpse was brought to the churchyard and deposited in the porch of the church.

"Secondly, did Mr. Chapman refuse to bury the corpse so brought for burial? On this point, likewise, the evidence is full and conclusive.

"Thirdly, did this child come within either of the exceptions contained in the canon or rubric: that is, was the child denounced excommunicate, or was it unbaptized? The evidence of Mr. Moase sets the only real question on this point at rest; for he proves that this child, in February, 1840, was baptised by him with water, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and, therefore, according to the doctrine of the law as declared by this court, affirmed by the judicial committee of the Privy Council, (the appellate court,) in the case of Martin v. Escott, it was a valid baptism, entitling the body of this child to have the burial service read over it; the child was not 'unbaptized,' within the meaning of the rubric. And I think, also, that it appears from the evidence of Mr. Moase, that in February, 1840, he did himself inform Mr. Chapman that the child had been so baptised, and this will go to satisfy the article which pleads that Mr. Chapman was sufficiently apprised of the baptism of the child, the court being at liberty to go back to that date to see whether Mr. Chapman was apprised of the fact, that the child had been baptised with water, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

"I think, therefore, that on these three questions the court is satisfied; namely, that the corpse of the child was brought to the churchyard for burial, that Mr. Chapman did refuse to bury it, and that it was not unbaptized.

"Still there remains another head of inquiry, and, in my view, not an unimportant one, and that is, the question of notice. The canon not only describes the canonical offence, but requires that the minister shall have convenient warning given to him before. These words do not appear to me to be unimportant; on the contrary, I think them extremely material. But it has been contended in the argument, that these words form no part of the body of the canon; that they are in a parenthesis, and are to be considered, for the purpose of this inquiry, as surplusage. Now it appears to me, on the contrary, that the words were advisedly inserted in the canon, whether in a parenthesis or between commas, is immaterial; that they are part of the canon, and that, if they are not complied with, the penalty does not attach. It cannot be said that, even if the words were omitted, there ought not to be some qualification of the canon. It cannot be contended, that a minister of the church of England could be punished for refusing to bury a corpse brought to the churchyard, unless he had some previous information that it would be so brought; and therefore the words of the canon itself necessarily import some qualification. Then, if the canon, without these words, would require some previous notice, can it be said, that the words 'convenient warning being given him thereof,' introduced into the canon, are, in the construction of it, to be left altogether out of the consideration of the court, as mere surplusage? Is it to be said, that no notice is necessary; that the bringing of the corpse into the churchyard is a sufficient notice; that a minister is punishable for not having at the moment gone forth and performed the burial service on the occasion? That some qualification of the canon is necessary must be apparent from this consideration, that the mere fact of a corpse being brought to the churchyard cannot be a sufficient notice of itself, because the minister might be engaged in other duties; there might be other services to be performed at the very time, which would render the sudden performance of the service for the dead inconvenient and even impracticable. But the canon itself renders it unnecessary to pursue this head of inquiry further, for it requires previous notice to be given, and whether the words are inserted in a parenthesis or in the body of the canon, they cannot be taken to be without some meaning attached to them, and as the canon is highly penal in itself, the party proceeded against is entitled to any benefit he can derive from a defect in any part of the proof. Unless all the circumstances specified in the canon concur, no canonical offence is proved to have been committed by Mr. Chapman.

"An observation has been made upon the difference between the Latin canon and the English canon; it is said, that in the one the word is 'competens,' in the other 'convenient.' But if there be any distinction between 'competens' and 'convenient,' it appears to me that this not a proceeding upon the Latin canon, but upon the English canon, which is set forth in the articles, and in this case was

VICT. c. 86.

STAT. 3 & 4
VICT. c. 86.

must look at the words of the English canon, which directs that the minister shall have 'convenient warning.'

"Now the words themselves appear to me to be extremely important, as defining the manner and the time of the notice. What are the words? 'Convenient warning being given him thereof before.' A warning is not sufficient of itself; it must be a convenient warning; that is, with reference to the circumstances of time, place, and the occupations of the minister, who might be so engaged in the performance of other services as to render a warning, under the circumstances, not a convenient warning. But he is to have convenient warning 'thereof.' It has been argued, that in this case the warning was sufficient, because the corpse was brought into the church porch, and left there, and that this was the same as if notice had been left at the minister's house; that the minister of the parish having information that the body had been brought to the churchyard, and deposited in the porch, it was equivalent to a notice being left at his house. What is the meaning of the word 'thereof?' To what does it refer? It cannot be contended, that by a corpse being brought to the churchyard, notice 'thereof' is given; it may be notice of the fact of the corpse having been brought to the church or churchyard; but the warning 'thereof,' as I understand the canon, is of the intention to bring a corpse to the churchyard for burial; because, otherwise, it is impossible that the minister could observe the direction in the rubric, to meet the corpse at the entrance of the churchyard, and precede it to the church or to the grave, repeating certain sentences appointed in the service for the burial of the dead. I conceive, therefore, that 'convenient warning thereof' means, of the intention to bring the corpse to the churchyard, and not of the corpse having been actually brought there.

"Then, when is the notice to be given? 'Before.' Before what? Before the minister is to bury the corpse; or before the corpse is brought to the churchyard? The latter is the next antecedent. I think it is quite impossible for words to be more precise than those in this canon. Cases may arise in which a warning, convenient in one case, may not be so in another. The warning must, therefore, be given 'before,' that is, before the act is to be performed, that preparation may be made for the interment of the corpse, and that the minister may be prepared for the due performance of his duty, one of which is, meeting the corpse at the entrance of the churchyard or the church. And for what reason is this prior notice required? First, to secure the attendance of the clergyman to perform the duty. If it so happened, in this case, that Mr. Chapman was at home at half-past six in the afternoon, and it was not inconvenient to him to perform the ceremony at that time, it might have been very inconvenient, and the party proceeded against, under a penal statute, has a right to object to the promoter of the office, that he has not proved a previous warning. It may so happen, that no grave had been prepared, and no preparations made for the interment, for there is nothing in the evidence to show that any preparations were made for the interment of this child, and Mr. Chapman is entitled to take advantage of any deficiency in the proof. It has been argued, that he must have been aware of the circumstance, as he had provided himself with a witness; but I am of opinion, that the canon must be followed out in all its parts, and if the proof falls short in any one of the circumstances, a canonical offence is not proved.

"But was the promoter taken by surprise on this head? Does not the article itself shew the construction of the canon, and what was necessary to be proved? The 3d article expressly pleads, that Mr. Chapman refused to bury the corpse then brought to the churchyard, 'convenient warning having been given him thereof before;' and this is set forth in the decree itself, and in the heading of the articles. It is pleaded in that article, that Mr. Chapman expressly declared his determination not to bury the corpse before it was brought to the churchyard, and that implies, that a notice had been given, that the corpse would be brought for burial. So that it is clear, on the face of the articles and of the decree, that the construction of the canon, in the opinion of the promoter's legal advisers, is the same as that which the court has put upon it; and, therefore, the party knew what he had to prove, and took upon himself the onus of proving, that Mr. Chapman had convenient warning.

"This leads the court to a consideration of the evidence, and what does it amount to? Is there any proof of any notice till the corpse had been actually left in the porch, when John Rumbold (the father) went to inform Mr. Chapman? All the witnesses deny the giving of any such notice. Mr. Moase, the adviser of Rumbold, expressly says, that he had no communication with Mr. Chapman on that day. Rumbold says he gave no notice to him, and Hopkins, another witness, states, that he gave no notice that the body was to be brought to the churchyard. This being the result of the evidence, the requisite of the canon, that convenient warning thereof should be given before to Mr. Chapman, has not been proved, and, if so, can it be said that a canonical offence, under the canon, has been proved?

"It may be proper to refer to the evidence of the witnesses. Hopkins, the first witness, says:

"Knowing that Mr. Chapman had refused to bury the corpse, and that it was to be offered to him again for burial this day, the 26th May, 1841, I went with other persons to witness what passed. Mr. Chapman was not in the churchyard to meet the corpse, and it was deposited in the porch of the church whilst Mr. Rumbold went to the vicarage to ask for Mr. Chapman. I saw him enter the house, and presently he returned, and asked me to go into the house, as a witness to what passed between Mr. Chapman and him. I went with him, and in the parlour found Mr. Chapman and a Mr. Seabrook, clerk to a solicitor at Reyton. Mr. Chapman then said, that he wished some one to be present to be a witness to what passed, for fear of any misunderstanding.

"It has been argued, upon this part of the evidence, that Mr. Chapman must have had some notice, otherwise he would not have provided himself with a witness to prevent misunderstanding. Supposing this to be the real construction of the evidence, I cannot think that the court is at liberty to hold that there had been convenient warning beforehand upon an inference such as this. How did it happen that Mr. Chapman provided himself with a witness? How does it appear that Mr. Seabrook was not there for other business? Being present, and Rambold having come to request him to bury his child, Mr. Chapman might say, 'Will you be a witness to what passes, to prevent misunderstanding?' But to argue from this that Mr. Chapman must have had some information of the intention to bring the child, and had provided Mr. Seabrook for the purpose of being a witness, would be pressing this evidence too far. Nothing was more easy to prove than the notice, if any such was given, and am I to go to such a latitude of construction of this evidence as to infer from it that there had been notice given, of which there is no proof whatever, because Mr. Seabrook was present on the occasion?"

"The witness goes on:

"Mr. Rambold said, 'I wish you to bury my child; to perform your office; I mean, to read the prayers of the church; and I will pay your demands, whatever they are.' The poor man hesitated in what he said, but he repeated the same request to Mr. Chapman to bury his child, in different words, several times. Mr. Chapman refused each time; he said, he declined to do it. He positively refused each time. I do not know what warning Mr. Chapman had of the intention to bring the corpse for burial, but he positively and formally refused to bury it. I do not know whether any notice was given to Mr. Chapman that the corpse would be brought for interment on either occasion."

"Rambold, the next witness, states:

"On the 26th of May, 1841, Mr. Chapman refused to bury the corpse of my infant. I took the corpse into the churchyard on that day, at half-past six in the evening, the time which Mr. Moase wrote to me to bring the child to be buried. When I had taken the child into the churchyard, not finding Mr. Chapman there, I went to his house, which is close by, adjoining to the churchyard. I saw him there, and asked him to come and bury my child. He asked me what I wanted of him. I said I wanted him to bury my child; to read the prayers over him, and I would pay his demand. He answered, 'I still refuse to do so.'"

"This may have reference to what took place in February, 1840, when he specifically assigned reasons for not burying the child, as having been baptized by a dissenting minister; and the words may have meant, 'I still refuse for the reasons I assigned on the former occasion.' Whether this was the first refusal on the 26th May, or followed after the first communication between them, STAT. 3 & 4 it may be not easy to determine; and the words 'I still refuse,' may have reference to a refusal to Rambold to bury his child, in a communication between him and Rambold before Hopkins came in. The witness says:

"I repeated my request several times, offering to pay his demand; but he answered, 'I have nothing more to say; I still refuse to do so.' I left the house when I found he would not do what I asked, and took the child back, and it is not buried yet. I do not know what warning Mr. Chapman had of my intention to bring the child for burial. Mr. Moase managed that, and he gave me notice when I was to come over to take the child for burial. Ten of my children had been previously buried in the churchyard of Bassingbourn, and two or three, if not more, by Mr. Chapman; my wife, who died in child-bed, was buried there by Mr. Chapman."

"I think that this is a fair and reasonable ground why he should have wished that his child should be interred there, to rest in the same place with the other persons of his family, and, therefore, nothing arises against him because he brought his child to be interred in the churchyard rather than in a dissenters' burial-ground; and it is not necessary for the court to advert to that objection. He goes on to say:

"I do not recollect that I informed Mr. Chapman, on the 26th May, 1841, that my child had been baptized; he did not ask me the question on that occasion; but he was aware that the child had been baptized by Mr. Moase, for I told him so on the first occasion on which I asked him to bury the child. On the second occasion, in May, 1841, he did not assign that as a reason for refusing to bury the child; he only said, 'I still decline to do so,' or some such words."

"And he goes on, in answer to the interrogatory, to say, that he was present at the baptism of his child; that Mr. Moase performed the ceremony, in the name of the Holy Trinity, with water, on the 14th February, 1840. He is interrogated as to whether the word 'baptize' was used; but it is unnecessary for the court to pursue that part of the case, as it is not upon this point that the final sentence of the court will be given. He is interrogated also as to his being a dissenter, as to the extent of ground in the dissenters' cemetery, and as to the prices paid for interment there. But I think it is most clear, from the evidence of this witness, that he gave no notice, and knew of no notice being given, as all was done under the direction of Mr. Moase."

"Now Mr. Moase has been examined, and he describes himself as a dissenter of the class called Independents, and minister of the Independent chapel. He says he had a communication with Mr. Chapman respecting the interment of this child, but not on the 26th May, 1841; it was in the year 1840. He says: 'I do not recollect seeing him on that day; I certainly had no communication with him. I saw the corpse pass my house on the way to the churchyard, but I did not accompany it. I do not myself know personally what warning Mr. Chapman had that the corpse would be brought to the churchyard for interment.' He goes on to state on interrogatory, that he was present at the baptism of the child, and performed the ceremony; that the words he used were, 'This child, whose name is Jane, I baptize in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;' and that the form of sprinkling the infant with water was used. He says he applied to the bishop, in consequence of Mr. Chapman's refusal to bury the child; but this has nothing to do with the question before the court. Then he goes on to answer certain questions as to his religious opinions, and as to certain expressions he made use of, which the court is not called upon to refer to, and, in fact, this is the whole of the evidence applicable to the notice.

"Now, what is the effect of this evidence? All the material facts are proved, except (in the words of the canon) that 'convenient warning was given to Mr. Chapman thereof before.' Not a single person who has been examined can depose that any notice was given to Mr. Chapman before the corpse was deposited in the porch of the church. I am of opinion, according to my construction of the words of the canon, that no canonical offence is committed, unless convenient warning has been given before of the intention to bring the corpse for burial; that it is a matter not only of convenience, but of decency, that such notice should be given beforehand; and if a minister, after due notice, refuses to perform the ceremony, he will be fully aware of the consequences of refusal under this penal statute. The proof is left short in what the court considers a material part of the charge, and, therefore, it is impossible for the court to pronounce that Mr. Chapman has incurred the penalty of the statute.

"This would be the opinion of the court upon the facts in evidence, and after hearing the argument, without reference to any thing which has occurred in courts of common law; because the ecclesiastical court has cognisance of cases relating to the performance of divine service, the burial of the dead, and every other part of the church ritual. But, supposing that a penalty had been imposed by statute, worded as this canon is, and the penalty was to be recovered at common law, I much question whether such penalty could be recovered against Mr. Chapman; indeed, I think the cases cited by Dr. Harding, show that it could not be recovered.

"The first case is that of Clovelly v. Cardinall, (1 Sid. 34.) which was an action on the case against a minister for refusing to administer the sacrament on two Sundays, and the verdict of the jury assessed the damages, (which were laid at 40*l.*.) and on motion for arrest of judgment, it was contended that he had not given due notice, and the court held that, as the plaintiff had declared for the non-administration of the sacrament on two Sundays, and as he had not proved that, upon the second refusal, he had requested the person to administer the sacrament to him, judgment must be arrested. Notice had been given on the first occasion, but not upon the second.

"Another case is that of Davis v. Black, (1 A. & E. N. S. 900.) which was also an action on the case against a minister for refusing to perform the marriage service between two persons by licence, notice having been given him of the licence. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, and on arrest of judgment, Lord Denman said: 'There is no great danger in saying that an action can hardly be maintained against an officer not required by law to perform the duty at any particular time, without allegation of malice, or of the time at which he refused being a reasonable time for the performance. Allowing fully that the action is maintainable on principle, the declaration is essentially defective. Hardly any of the objections can be got over. One is clearly fatal. At the time when the clergyman is supposed to have acted wrongfully, it does not appear that he had notice that both the parties were willing to be married. It is alleged that, at the time of the grievance, they were in fact willing; but it is not averred that the woman joined in the request. This is quite fatal, for you charge the minister with having improperly refused to marry, and yet the whole declaration might be proved, although he had no reason to believe the woman to be willing. It would be going far beyond all limits within which we allow defective declarations to be cured by verdicts, if we suffered this. Nothing can be supplied beyond that of which the proof is necessarily involved in the proof of what is alleged.' The circumstances are not the same as in the present case; but it shews how strict the court was in requiring, before an action for damages, that the minister should have had notice in full form. In the argument it was said that, 'there may be other reasonable cause for a clergyman not performing the duty; he may, for instance, be engaged at the time in the performance of another clerical office, as in reading divine service in church: reasonable notice should have been averred, in order that he might make proper arrangements as to time.' Why, here was the same necessity for proper arrangements as to time for receiving the body and interring it. So, I say, if Mr. Rambold, or any person acting in his behalf, had gone to Mr. Chapman, and said, 'My child is lying dead at home; I propose to bring the corpse for interment at such a time,' and that was a convenient time, and if Mr. Chapman had not named a more convenient time, and the other party had given him notice of the particular time of half-past six in the afternoon of the 26th May, and the corpse had been brought to the churchyard at that time, and Mr. Chapman had refused to bury it, then the penalty annexed to the offence by the canon would have been incurred, as there would have been a reasonable notice, and a refusal to perform the duty, and if the case was not shewn to be inconvenient, this would have satisfied the terms of the canon. And this is in conformity with the obvious and common sense view of the case, that persons are not to select for themselves a time for the performance of the service without notice to the clergyman, that is, notice of the intention, not notice of the corpse having been actually brought to the churchyard. I think, in this case, that notice was necessary, and if the promotor has failed to show that it was given, the offence under the canon is not proved to have been committed.

"Under these circumstances, I am of opinion, therefore, that there is a material defect in the proof of the facts alleged in the articles, and the deficiency applies to that which is not only a matter of convenience but of decency and order; and although Mr. Chapman may have had other reasons for refusing to perform the office, the court is not to decide upon conjecture, but upon proof. It is proved that the corpse was brought to the churchyard, and that Mr. Chapman refused to bury it, but gave no reason; he said, 'I still refuse,' but assigned no reason upon this occasion, and the party proceeded against him under a particular canon, not under the general ecclesiastical law, the canon imposing a particular penalty for a particular offence, which must be proved in all its parts. I am of opinion that I must pronounce, and I do pronounce, that the promotor has failed in proof of the articles, and consequently I dismiss Mr. Chapman from the suit, and from all further observance of justice in this cause, and I dismiss him with his costs."

A complaint having been made to the Lord Bishop of Exeter, on the part of the family of the late B. H. Lyne, Esquire, of Liskeard, that the Rev. J. F. Todd, vicar of that parish, in reading the burial service at the funeral of the deceased, at the parish church of Liskeard, had omitted part of one of the prayers of the service; a commission was issued by his lordship under the Church Discipline Act, and the commissioners, after hearing the accusation against Mr. Todd and his defence thereto, found, that, in their opinion, there was sufficient prima facie ground for instituting further proceedings. In consequence of which Mr. Todd gave his consent, that without such further proceedings the Right Rev. Prelate might pronounce sentence upon him. His lordship therefore proceeded to the chapter house, and delivered his sentence in these words:

"This is a proceeding instituted against the Rev. James Frederick Todd, vicar of Liskeard, by the brother of Mr. Benjamin Hart Lyne, late of that parish, deceased, for that in the burial of the deceased Mr. Todd purposely omitted the following very important words of one of the prayers in the office of burial: 'as our hope is this our brother doth.'

"A commission was issued to five clergymen of the diocese, (among whom was the vicar-general, the dean, and two archdeacons,) to inquire, whether there was a sufficient prima facie case to demand further proceedings. The commissioners having made their return in due form, 'that there is sufficient prima facie ground for instituting further proceedings;' and Mr. Todd having submitted himself to the judgment of his bishop, thereby acknowledging the offence charged, it remains for me to pronounce judgment accordingly.

"In looking to the nature of the offence thus acknowledged, it is impossible to shut our eyes to the too manifest intent with which the words above cited were omitted. It is plain and undeniable that they were omitted because the minister did not choose to give expression to the pious and charitable hope of the church, that the deceased christian brother resteth in our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the Resurrection and the Life; and in whom unless he resteth, so as to be 'found in him' at the last day, he hath perished everlastingly.

"This pious and charitable hope of the church, I say, Mr. Todd knowingly and with premeditation refused to express; thereby intimating that it was not to be entertained in respect to the deceased, whose corpse he was then burying. And, if there could otherwise be a doubt whether such an intimation was designed, that doubt would be removed by the matter alleged, whether in justification, or in excuse of the omission. Mr. Todd, it seems, had been informed, on what he considered unquestionable authority, that the deceased had died in a state of intoxication; in other words, in sin. That information, indeed, he admits that he subsequently found to have been erroneous; and because it was erroneous, because the deceased did not die in a state of intoxication, he has ingenuously and fully declared his sorrow for the pain which has been inflicted on the surviving relatives by his unhappy condemnation of the state of the soul of the deceased.

"This retraction, and the sorrow expressed by him, are creditable to his candour; but they are very far indeed from removing (in whatever degree they can be admitted as an extenuation of) his offence. For, ignorance of the fact, or rather belief, through ignorance, of an unreal fact, though that ignorance have been the sole cause of the offence, cannot be allowed to excuse, if the fact itself, so believed through ignorance, be such as would, if real, not justify the conduct into which belief of it may have misled the party. Now such is the case in the present instance. Even if the deceased had died in a state of intoxication, however his minister may have lamented it, however it may have impaired the hope of his being admitted to rest in Christ, yet it ought not, on just consideration of the terms of the christian covenant, to have extinguished that hope, much less to have induced him to proclaim, or even to suggest, the extinction of it.

"God, when he vouchsafes to regenerate by

sonally what warning Mr. Chapman had that the corpse would be brought to the churchyard for interment.' He goes on to state on interrogatory, that he was present at the baptism of the child, and performed the ceremony; that the words he used were, 'This child, whose name is Jane, I baptize in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;' and that the form of sprinkling the infant with water was used. He says he applied to the bishop, in consequence of Mr. Chapman's refusal to bury the child; but this has nothing to do with the question before the court. Then he goes on to answer certain questions as to his religious opinions, and as to certain expressions he made use of, which the court is not called upon to refer to, and, in fact, this is the whole of the evidence applicable to the notice.

"Now, what is the effect of this evidence? All the material facts are proved, except (in the words of the canon) that 'convenient warning was given to Mr. Chapman thereof.' Not a single person who has been examined can depose that any notice was given to Mr. Chapman before the corpse was deposited in the porch of the church. I am of opinion, according to my construction of the words of the canon, that no canonical offence is committed, unless convenient warning has been given before of the intention to bring the corpse for burial; that it is a matter not only of convenience, but of decency, that such notice should be given beforehand; and if a minister, after due notice, refuses to perform the ceremony, he will be fully aware of the consequences of refusal under this penal statute. The proof is left short in what the court considers a material part of the charge, and, therefore, it is impossible for the court to pronounce that Mr. Chapman has incurred the penalty of the statute.

"This would be the opinion of the court upon the facts in evidence, and after hearing the argument, without reference to any thing which has occurred in courts of common law; because the ecclesiastical court has cognizance of cases relating to the performance of divine service, the burial of the dead, and every other part of the church ritual. But, supposing that a penalty had been imposed by statute, worded as this canon is, and the penalty was to be recovered at common law, I much question whether such penalty could be recovered against Mr. Chapman; indeed, I think the cases cited by Dr. Harding, show that it could not be recovered.

"The first case is that of Clovel v. Cardinell, (1 Sid. 34,) which was an action on the case against a minister for refusing to administer the sacrament on two Sundays, and the verdict of the jury assessed the damages, (which were laid at 40*l.*), and on motion for arrest of judgment, it was contended that he had not given due notice, and the court held that, as the plaintiff had declared for the non-administration of the sacrament on two Sundays, and as he had not proved that, upon the second refusal, he had requested the person to administer the sacrament to him, judgment was had been given on upon the second.

"Another case (1 A. & E. N. S.) action on the case fusing to perform between two persons' been given him of found a verdict for rest of judgment, L. is no great danger can hardly be main not required by law any particular time, malice, or of the ti being a reasonable ti Allowing fully that able on principle, ti tially defective. So, I say, if Mr. person acting in his behalf, Chapman, and said, 'My cl at home; I propose to brin interment at such a time,' convenient time, and if M not named a more conven other party had given him t ticular time of half-past six of the 26th May, and the brought to the churchyard a Mr. Chapman had refused t the penalty annexed to the canon would have been inc would have been a reasonable refusal to perform the duty, was not shewn to be inconveni have satisfied the terms of the this is in conformity with the common sense view of the cas to select for themselves a time for performance of the service without notice to the sexton, that is, notice of the death, and not notice of the corpse having been brought to the churchyard. I think, therefore, that notice was necessary, and that the sexton has failed to show that it was the offence under the canon is not to have been committed.

Under these circumstances, I am of opinion, therefore, that there is a material defect in some of the facts alleged in the articles, and the deficiency applies to that which is only a matter of convenience but of no good order; and although Mr. Chapman have had other reasons for refusing to go to the office, the court is not to assume a conjecture, but upon proof. It is that the corpse was brought to the stand, and that Mr. Chapman refused to go, but gave no reason; he said, "I have," but assigned no reason upon this point, and the party proceeded against him under a particular canon, not under one of ecclesiastical law, the canon imposing the penalty for a particular offence, which must be proved in all its parts. I am of opinion that I must pronounce, and I do so, that the promotor has failed in the articles, and consequently I discharge Mr. Chapman from the suit, and from the observance of justice in this cause, and dismiss him with his costs."

This retraction, and the answer expressed by him, are evidence — as we have seen — that he was sincerely moving; in whatever respect he admitted an extension of his feelings or ignorance of the fact, or of its effect, through ignorance, of some sort, although that ignorance have been one cause of the offence, cannot it follow, because, if the fact itself, in relation to ignorance, be such as would justify the conduct into which said offence may have misled the party? Now even in the case in the present instance. Even if the deceased had died in a state of misapprehension, however his minister may have intended to comfort him, and to give him hope of his being admitted to rest in Christ, yet it might not, on just consideration of the terms of the christian covenant, to have encouraged him to hope, much less to have induced the extinction of it.

liturgy; particularly, as it came under notice, in this matter of the new liturgy upon the Restoration, when Prayer was revised. It was made to render it satisfactory to church itself, and to those who were in the church, particularly to the king; and for that purpose it was altered at the Savoy; but the king had an entire new liturgy drawn up, which, in the conference broke down, and the old one prevailed. The Liturgy was then re-ordered by the house of convocation; and the king; it was presented to him, and he passed an act confirmed 14th Charles 2, being passed upon the substance confirmed to this day, and no alteration may have been since the ratification Act, or by any other authority, or the directions of the king's Prayer, form a part of the law of the land. Now that law is binding upon the burial service to be performed on those who are unbaptized. If the minister was his duty, and not to perform the rite on those who are unbaptized, and if, by a refusal to receive them, he contained no exception, nor by any subsequent action.

baptism, vouchsafes also to give forgiveness of all sins to those who continue in the state in which they have been placed by baptism. Presumptuous and unrepented sin does, indeed, forfeit that state; but, thanks be to God, not sins of infirmity, and whether in the case of death under intoxication, the sin was presumptuous and unrepented, or a sin of infirmity, consistent with a living, though, it may be, languid, faith, it is not for man to pronounce.

"To hold the contrary, to assert for the priesthood a right to judge in every case of the final condition of the deceased, would be to claim the power of the keys, in a degree to which Papal Rome never dared to aspire, and which this reformed church, while it maintains the just authority of its priests for edification, not for destruction, hath always most strongly repudiated. Where would such a tyranny, if once endured, be content to stop? By the same right, if it were a right, by which this clergyman took upon him to decide that this deceased died in a state of intoxication, and excluded him, therefore, or seemed to have excluded him, from the hope of a Christian, he and every other clergyman might assume to judge of every other deceased, whether he died in any other sin, and was to be denounced, in the last solemn office over his mortal remains, as cut off from the body of Christ, and from the blessed inheritance of all who die in the Lord.

"I have deemed it necessary to make these remarks, not because I consider Mr. Todd as having intended to claim for himself so enormous and unchristian an authority in all cases, nor because I believe him in the present case to have exceeded a temporary and pardonable misapprehension of his right and duty as one intrusted with 'the care of the souls of his parishioners,' but because this is the first case which has been brought before me of such an offence; and because I deem it necessary, in the very first instance, to point out the grave and most mischievous consequences to which the offence has a manifest tendency to lead.

"Being, however, the first case, it may, I trust, without danger of misleading others, be dealt with leniently; and I rejoice that Mr. Todd, by submitting to my judgment in this stage of the proceedings, has enabled me thus to deal with him. I consider myself as dealing leniently, much more leniently than I should feel myself at liberty to deal with any similar case in future, when I pronounce my judgment, that the Rev. James Frederick Todd be suspended for the space of fourteen days, to be computed from the time of publishing the suspension in the parish church of Liskeard, from all discharge of his clerical functions, and execution of the duties thereof; that is to say, from preaching the word of God, administering the sacraments, and celebrating all other duties and offices in the parish church and parish of Liskeard, and elsewhere in the diocese of Exeter. And I hereby direct the said suspension to be duly published on Sunday, the 4th day of August next, previously to the commencement of divine service. And, moreover, I hereby condemn the said Rev. James Frederick Todd in the costs of the said proceedings."

V. BAPTISM BY PERSONS ALLEGED TO BE HERETICS OR SCHISMATICS.

Judgment of Sir John Nicholl in Kemp v. Wickes.

In the office of the judge promoted by Kemp v. Wickes, (3 Phill. 264.) Sir John Nicholl observed: "This suit is brought against the Reverend John Wight Wickes, described as the rector of Wardly-cum-Belton, for refusing to bury the infant child of two of his parishioners. The usual proceedings have been had in the institution of this suit; and articles are now offered, detailing the circumstances of the charge proposed to be proved. The admission of these articles is opposed, not upon the form of the pleading, but upon the entire law of the case: it being contended, that if the facts are all true, still the clergyman has acted properly, and has been guilty of no offence. . . .

"The articles plead, in the first place, the incumbency of Mr. Wickes. In the second article the 68th Canon is recited, which directs, 'that no minister shall refuse or delay to christen any child, according to the form of the Book of Common Prayer, that is brought to the church to him upon Sundays or holy-days to be christened; or to bury any corpse that is brought to the church or churchyard, (convenient warning being given him thereof before,) in such manner and form as is prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer; and if he shall refuse to christen the one or bury the other, except the party deceased were denounced excommunicated majori excommunicatione for some grievous and notorious crime, and no man able to testify of his repentance, he shall be suspended by the bishop of the diocese from his ministry for the space of three months.'

"The articles then go on to plead, 'that Mr. Wickes did in August, 1808, refuse to bury Hannah Swinger, the infant daughter of John Swinger and Mary Swinger his wife, of the parish of Wardly-cum-Belton aforesaid, then brought to the said church or churchyard, convenient warning having been given: that Hannah Swinger died within the parish of Wardly-cum-Belton, and being the daughter of the said John Swinger and Mary Swinger his wife, who are protestant dissenters from the church of England of the class or denomination of Calvinistic Independents, had been first baptized according to the form of baptism generally observed among that class of dissenters, that is to say, with water, and in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, by the Reverend George Gell, a minister, preacher, or teacher, in all respects duly qualified according to law, and of the same class of protestant dissenters; and that of that fact of baptism Mr. Wickes was sufficiently apprised, upon application being made for the burial of the infant in the churchyard of the said parish, in manner and form as is prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer: but he assigned the same,' that is, the form of baptism, 'expressly as the ground of his not complying with the said application.' Here, then, it is pleaded, and it is undertaken to be proved, and at present in this respect the articles must be taken to be true, that Mr. Wickes did not doubt on the question of fact that the infant had been so baptized, but he refused upon the ground of law, namely, that he was not bound to bury a person of that description. The remaining articles are in the usual form; they are not material to be stated for the purpose of considering the question that is now to be decided.

"In these articles it is pleaded, that the minister was required by regular warning to bury this infant in the form prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer, and by the canon. The canon, not made merely, (as has been thrown out,) for the protection of the clergy, but made for their discipline also, and to enforce the performance of their duty, prohibits the refusal of burial in all cases except in the case of excommunicated persons, and punishes such refusal; and perhaps the learned counsel who spoke last is correct in saying, that by the general description, 'persons,' is here to be understood Christian persons; and therefore that, where application was made for the burial of any persons who might not be considered as Christians, they did not come within the description of the canon. The rubric, however, which is that part of the Book of Common Prayer that contains directions for the performance of the different offices, adds two other exceptions expressly. The rubric before the office of burial is in this form: 'Here is to be noted, that the office ensuing is not to be used for any that die unbaptized, or excommunicate, or have laid violent hands upon themselves.' And, by the old law, burial was refused to persons of the same description, and indeed of some other descriptions; persons who had fallen in duels, and some others, were interdicted from receiving Christian burial: but here the rubric does expressly state, 'that the office is not to be used for persons unbaptized or excommunicated, or who have laid violent hands upon themselves.'

"These directions, contained in the rubric, are clearly of binding obligation and authority. Questions indeed have been raised respecting the Canons of 1603, which were never confirmed by parliament, whether they do, in certain instances, and proprio vigore, bind the laity: but the Book of Common Prayer, and therefore the rubric contained in the Book of Common Prayer, has been confirmed by parliament. Anciently, and before the Reformation, various liturgies were used in this country; and it should seem, as if each bishop might in his own particular diocese direct the form in which the public service was to be performed: but after the Reformation, in the reigns of Edward the Sixth and Queen Elizabeth, acts of uniformity passed, and those acts of uniformity established a particular liturgy to be used throughout the kingdom. King James the First made some alteration in the Liturgy; particularly, as it will be necessary to notice, in this matter of baptism. Immediately upon the Restoration, the Book of Common Prayer was revised. An attempt was then made to render it satisfactory, both to the church itself, and to those who dissented from the church, particularly to the Presbyterians; and for that purpose conferences were held at the Savoy: but the other party requiring an entire new liturgy on an entire new plan, the conference broke up without success. The Liturgy was then revised by the two houses of convocation; it was approved by the king; it was presented to the parliament, and an act passed confirming it in the 13th and 14th Charles 2, being the last act which has passed upon the subject; and so it stands confirmed to this day, except so far as any alteration may have been produced by the Toleration Act, or by any subsequent statutes.

"The rubric, then, or the directions of the Book of Common Prayer, form a part of the statute law of the land. Now that law in the rubric forbids the burial service to be used for persons who die unbaptized. It is not matter of option; it is not matter of expediency and benevolence, (as seems to have been represented in argument,) whether a clergyman shall administer the burial service, or shall refuse it; for the rubric, thus confirmed by the statute, expressly enjoins him not to perform the office in the specified cases; and the question is, whether this infant, baptized with water in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, by a dissenting minister, who is pleaded to have qualified himself according to the regulations of the Toleration Act, did die unbaptized within the true meaning of the rubric. If the child died unbaptized, the minister was not only justified, but it was his duty, and he was enjoined by law, not to perform the service. If the child did not die unbaptized, then he has violated the canon, by a refusal neither justified by any exception contained in the canon itself expressly, nor by any subsequent law. . . .

"To ascertain the true meaning of the law, the ordinary rules of construction must be resorted to; first, by considering the words in their plain meaning and in their general sense, unconnected with the law; and, in the next place, by examining whether any special meaning can be affixed to the words, when connected with the law; either in its context or in its history.

"The plain simple import of the word unbaptized, in its general sense, and unconnected with the rubric, is, obviously, a person not baptized at all, not initiated into the Christian church. In common parlance, as it is sometimes expressed, that is, in the ordinary mode of speech and in the common use of language, it may be said, that this person A. was baptized according to the form of the Romish church; that another person B. was baptized according to the form of the Greek church; that another person C. was baptized according to the form of the presbyterian church; that another was baptized according to the form used among the Calvinistic independents; and that another person was baptized according to the form used by the church of England: but it could not be said of any of those persons, that they were unbaptized; each had been admitted into the Christian church in a particular form; but the ceremony of baptism would not have remained unadministered, provided the essence of baptism, according to what has generally been received among Christians as the essence of baptism, had taken place.

"Such being the general meaning of the word in its ordinary application and use, and standing unconnected with this particular law, is there anything in the law itself, in its context, that varies or limits its meaning? The context is, that the office shall not be used for persons who die unbaptized or excommunicate, or that lay violent hands upon themselves. What, then, is the description of persons excluded from burial that is put in association with these unbaptized persons? Excommunicated persons and suicides.

"Now excommunication, in the meaning of the law of the English church, is not merely an expulsion from the church of England, but from the Christian church generally. The ecclesiastical law excommunicates papists. The ecclesiastical law excommunicates presbyterians. Dissenters of all descriptions from the church of England are liable to excommunication. But what is meant by the church of England by the term of excommunication can be best explained by the Articles of that church. By the 33d Article it is expressly stated, 'That person which by open denunciation of the church is rightly cut off from the unity of the church and excommunicated, ought to be taken of the whole multitude of the faithful, as an heathen and publican until he be openly reconciled by penance, and received into the church by a judge that hath authority thereunto;' that is, he is no longer to be considered as a Christian, no longer to be considered as a member of the Christian church universal, but he is to be considered 'as an heathen and a publican,' for those are the words of the Article.

"It has been said, that in this country a foreign excommunication could not be noticed, and that a foreign country could not notice an excommunication by this country; and certainly that is true, for no laws can be made binding and compulsory beyond the country over which the authority making the law extends. The Articles of Religion, though confirmed by act of parliament, only extend to this country, and to the subjects of this country. The discipline of the church, and its punishment by excommunication, can therefore only extend to this country; but all his majesty's subjects, whether of the church of England, or whether dissenting from that church, either as papists or as any other description of dissenters, are bound to consider an excommunicated person as an heathen and a publican, be the person himself of the church of England, or be he of any other class or sect. This is the first description of persons put in association with persons unbaptized.

"The next description is that of suicides: they are supposed to die in the commission of mortal sin, and in open contempt of their

Saviour and of his precepts; to have renounced Christianity; to have unchristianized themselves; that is the view which the law takes of the persons who are self-murderers.

"Then, taking the context of the law, putting unbaptized persons in association with excommunicated persons, and with suicides, both of whom are considered as no longer Christians, it leads to the same construction as the general import of the words; namely, that burial is to be refused to those who are not Christians at all, and not to those who are baptized according to the forms of any particular church. . . .

"The general law is, that burial is to be refused to no person. This is the law, not only of the English church; it is the law, not only of all Christian churches; but it seems to be the law of common humanity; and the limitation of such a law must be considered strictissimi juris. . . .

"The law of the church of England, and its history, are to be deduced from the ancient general canon law; from the particular Constitutions made in this country to regulate the English church; from our own Canon, from the Rubric, and from any acts of parliament that may have passed upon the subject; and the whole may be illustrated, also, by the writings of eminent persons.

"Now if the first head be inquired into, (the ancient canon law,) it will appear that, from the earliest times, the use of water with the invocation of the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, was held to be the essence of baptism; that baptism, so administered, even by a layman or a woman, was valid; and that a person, who had been so baptized, was not to be baptized again.

"It may not be improper just to refer to the passages of Scripture, which have been referred to by the church itself as the foundation of its law in this respect: they are these. First, the words of our Saviour, 'Unless a man be born again of water, and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.' Hence the church, (without presuming to decide whether a person unbaptized might not be saved through God's mercy, yet) has held, that baptism was so strongly enjoined as a matter of indispensable necessity, that rather than omit it altogether, the ceremony was to be performed even by a layman. The words of our Saviour after his resurrection, 'Go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost,' have been held to require the invocation of the Holy Trinity, as the essential form of words necessary to baptism. The passage in the Epistle to the Ephesians, 'One Lord, one faith, one baptism,' has been held by the church to prohibit a second baptism; or, as the learned Hooker has expressed it, 'Iteration of baptism once given has always been thought a manifest contempt of that ancient apostolic aphorism, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism."'" It is here, however, to be observed, that the court is not entering into any question of theological controversy; it is merely endeavouring to trace and to ascertain the fact,—what has been held by the church to be the law. The court has only to administer the law as it finds it; it is not to presume to enter into any speculations upon its propriety.

"Now, conformable to what has been already stated will be found the text of the canon law. The passages in that law are almost innumerable. Many have been cited by the counsel. In the third part of the decree De consecratione, and in the fourth distinction, De baptismi sacramento, there are a great number of paragraphs to this effect; and it may be sufficient just to state the titles of the different paragraphs or sections of that Distinction. For instance, the nineteenth paragraph states, 'nemo nisi sacerdos baptizare presumat;' certainly directing, that regular baptism is to be administered by the priest; or perhaps it may be more properly said, public baptism. The 21st section is: 'Etiam laici necessitate cogente baptizare possunt;' 'in cases of urgency laymen may baptize.' The 23rd, 'Non reiteratur baptismus quod a pagano ministratur;' 'if baptism has been administered by a pagan, it is not to be iterated;' so cautious was the ancient church, that there should be no re-baptism. The 25th, 'Sicut per bonum ita per malum ministrum sequè baptismus ministratur.'

"The character of the person who administered, therefore, was of no effect in the validity of baptism. The 26th is to the same effect, but rather more explanatory: 'Non merita ministrorum, sed virtus Christi, in baptismate operatur.' The 28th, 'Non reiteratur baptismus quod in nomine Sanctæ Trinitatis ministratur;' and it goes on to illustrate by an example, 'Si qui apud illos hæreticos baptizati sunt, qui in Sanctæ Trinitatis confessione baptizant, et veniant ad nos, recipiantur quidem ut baptizati, ne Sanctæ Trinitatis invocatio vel confessio annulletur.' This, therefore, points out, that the essence was the invocation of the Holy Trinity. The baptism of any heretics, (and the church deemed all dissenters to be of that description,) that of any dissenters, who made use of the name of the Holy Trinity in baptism, was to be received, lest the invocation of the Holy Trinity should be rendered and considered as of no effect. The 32nd, 'Non reiteratur baptismus quod in fide Sanctæ Trinitatis ab hæreticis præstatur;' that, therefore, is to the same effect as the former section. The 36th is, 'Valet baptismus, etsi per laicos ministratur;' and that section again explains the principle upon which the church acted, 'Sanctum est baptismus per seipsum quod datum est in nomine Patris, Filii, et Spiritûs Sancti.' There are many other passages to the same effect, confirming all the foregoing; and it is perfectly clear that, according to the general canon law, though regular baptism was by a bishop or priest, yet, if administered by a laic, or by a heretic or schismatic, it was valid baptism; and so valid, that it was not to be repeated.

"The next branch of the law of our church, and which reached down to the time of the Reformation, was the law which is to be found in the Legatine and Provincial Constitutions; the former being laws made in this country under the sanction of the Pope's legates, Otho, legate of Gregory the Ninth, and Othobon, legate of Clement the Fourth. The latter, the provincial constitutions, were those made in convocation under several archbishops. The whole of these have been collected by the very eminent English canonist, Lyndwood; who has written a very learned commentary or gloss. upon them, which is also of high authority in all courts administering the ecclesiastical law of this country. These constitutions are precisely to the same effect as the former. Regular baptism was to be administered by a priest, and in the church, and at certain stated times of the year: but in cases of urgency a layman might administer baptism in private houses, rather than it should not be administered at all. If a layman interposed without necessity in the office he was punishable; but still the baptism was valid, and by no means to be repeated.

"In the Constitution of Otho, 'De Baptismo et Formâ Baptizandi,' which will be found in Lyndwood, p. 10 of the Legatine Constitutions, it is among other things directed, that priests shall particularly instruct their parishioners in the form of baptizing: of course shewing that lay baptism was allowed; that it was recommended, rather than that no baptism at all should take place: otherwise it could not have been proper and necessary for the priests to have instructed their parishioners in the form. The Constitution of Othobon, to be found in Lyndwood, p. 80, confirms and approves of this former constitution, and enjoins precisely the same thing. The Provincial Constitutions of Archbishop Peccham particularly enjoin, that after baptism by a layman it is not to be iterated. The passage will be found in Lyndwood, 41: 'Caveant sacerdotes ne baptismum legitimè factum audeant iterare;' and Lyndwood, in his Gloss. upon the word 'Baptismus,' says, 'Sive per laicum sive per clericum etiam per paganus in casu necessitatis;' so that it is good, 'whether by a layman, or a clergyman, nay, even in case of necessity, by a pagan;' and in his Gloss. upon the words 'Legitimè factum,' he says, two things are essential to it, 'duo sunt necessaria, verbum et elementum aque;' and in describing what is meant by 'verbum,' he explains the form of the words to be those which have been always used, 'I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.' In a further Constitution of Archbishop Peccham, to be found in p. 244, it is again strongly enjoined not to baptize a second time persons who have been baptized by laymen or by women; and he speaks rather strongly of those priests who do so baptize, terming them 'stolidi sacerdotes:' and the constitution concludes, 'Quod si sacerdos rationabiliter dubitet an parvulus in formâ debitâ baptizatus sit, dicat, Si baptizatus es, ego non rebaptizo te; si nondum baptizatus es, ego baptizo te in nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritûs Sancti.' Lyndwood here again cautiously explains the words 'in formâ debitâ,' as he had before, to mean by the use of the element water, and by the use of the words of the invocation of the Holy Trinity; and that it was 'in formal debit⁴, though by a layman.

"Now these passages shew, not only that those baptisms were held to be valid, but they shew how extremely cautious the church was, that baptism should not be repeated. These references to the ancient law will also serve to explain and illustrate any matter, which could be considered as doubtful in the construction of the more modern law of the rubric. It therefore seems to admit of no doubt, that by the law of the English church, as well deduced from the general canon law, as from its own particular constitutions, down to the time of the Reformation, lay baptism was allowed and practised. It was regular, and even prescribed, in cases of necessity: it was so complete and valid, that it was by no means to be repeated. It also clearly appears that, in order to ascertain its validity, no inquiry was necessary to be made into the existing urgency under which it was administered; but only into what was declared to be the essence, whether it had been administered by water, and in the form of the invocation; for, if those forms were used, the baptism by a layman was complete and valid.

"So the matter stood at the time of the Reformation: and that period is an important one; for, if lay baptism had been considered as one of the errors of the Romish church, it would have been corrected at the time when all the Christian world had their attention pointed to those particular errors. But the fact is otherwise, for the use of lay baptism was manifestly continued by the English reformed church. Liturgies were framed, and acts of uniformity passed by parliament, in the reigns of Edward the Sixth, and of Queen Elizabeth. In those the rubrics run thus: 'Let those that be present call upon God for his grace, and say the Lord's Prayer if the time will suffer: and then one of them shall name the child, and dip him in the water, or pour the water upon him, saying these words, "I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."' Here is no mention whatever of a priest or lawful minister, as the person who is to officiate upon the occasion: it is directed to be done by 'those who are present,' or one of them, without singling out or particularizing what the person is to be who is to administer this sacrament. And the better opinion seems to be, that all private baptism was by laymen antecedent to the time of King James: that it was only public baptism in the church which was to be administered by a priest; and that, wherever there was the sort of urgency and necessity which prevented the child being brought to the church, and required the child to be baptized at home, the baptism was to be administered by any person without requiring the attendance of the priest. The same rubric, although it enjoins the people not to baptize their children at home except in cases of necessity; yet, lest the necessity should arise, expressly directs the pastors to instruct their parishioners in the form of doing it. Hence it is evident, that subsequent to the Reformation the English reformed church itself did allow the practice of lay baptism.

"So the practice stood from the Reformation till the time of King James the First; except that in the year 1575, among some articles agreed upon at that time in convocation, there appears to have been one, (the 12th article,) which states, 'That to resolve doubts by whom private baptism is to be administered, it is directed that in future it shall be administered by a minister only, and that private persons shall not intermeddle therewith.' This article rather appears not to have been published and circulated. It remained in manuscript. It had no authority, not appearing to have been even confirmed by the crown. There could have been no doubt upon the rubric of Edward the Sixth, coupled with what was the old law, so far as respected the validity of lay baptism. And the bishops certainly had not authority to alter the law; they had only authority to explain matters which were doubtful; and the doubt seems to have been, not whether lay baptism was valid, but whether it was regular and orderly. Up to that time, wherever private baptism was allowed, there was nothing to be found in the ancient canons, the constitutions of the church, or the rubric, that required the minister as a person at all necessary to be present for the orderly administration of such private baptism: it was not even to be inferred that it would be more regular, for the minister is not mentioned; on the contrary, in cases where private baptism was necessary, (and it was only allowed in cases of necessity,) the people were to be instructed how to perform it themselves. . . .

"King James the First (who considered himself a great divine) disapproved of the practice of lay baptism. Soon after his accession, conferences were held at Hampton Court, with the clergy, for the purpose of revising and reconsidering the Liturgy, and particularly this article of private baptism. The king expressed strongly his disapprobation of lay baptism; and seemed now inclined to no baptism at all than that the office should be performed by a laic, but his divines (most of them prelates of very great eminence) differed from him in respect to preferring the total omission of baptism to its being administered by a layman. It was, however, agreed so far to alter the rubric, as to direct that private baptism should be administered by a lawful minister: but whoever reads the account which has been preserved of these conferences will see that neither the king nor the bishops maintained that baptism, if de facto performed by a laic, was invalid. . . .

"Private baptism by laymen had always been held valid, and almost enjoined as regular. The rubric having now introduced the order, that it shall be administered by the lawful minister,—what would be the obvious construction of this alteration? That in the regular and ordinary and decent administration of private baptism, it became the duty of the lawful minister to perform the office. But if the old law was meant to be completely changed; if it had been intended to invalidate the old law in this respect, and that all other baptism, except that by a lawful minister, should be considered as absolutely null and void; the new law would most expressly and distinctly have declared it.

"It is obvious, that the person performing the baptism was not essential by the rubric; and in this respect the rubric exactly conformed to the old law, for the baptism remained valid, and was not to be repeated; and even to what King James said at the conference just before this rubric was approved, that he utterly disliked all re-baptization.

"After tracing the law through the several stages of its history, it appears impossible to entertain a reasonable doubt, that the church did at all times, (whatever might have been the opinions of particular individuals upon this point, as there will be difference of opinion among individuals upon all points—that the church itself did at all times,) hold baptism by water in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, to be valid baptism, though not administered by a priest who had been episcopally ordained—or rather, to state it more generally, though administered by a layman or any other person. If that be so, if that is the construction of baptism by the church of England, then the refusal of burial to a person 'unbaptized,' that term simply being used, cannot mean that it should be refused to persons who have not been baptized by a lawful minister in the form of the Book of Common Prayer; since the church itself, holds persons not to be unbaptized, (because it holds them to be validly baptized,) who have been baptized with water, and the invocation by any other person, and in any other form.

"There were many laws, both of church and state, requiring conformity to the church, creating disabilities, imposing penalties, and denouncing excommunications upon all non-conformity. Now, supposing that during the existence of these disabilities it could be maintained, that in point of law no act of non-conformists could be recognised in a court of justice, and therefore that a baptism administered by such persons could not be noticed at all, either by the church or by the courts administering the law of the church, yet could it be maintained now, that such a baptism was to be considered as a mere nullity? If such could have been considered as the view of the law before the Toleration Act, (cap 633, n. (2).) yet that act would change the whole shape of the thing; that act removed the disabilities, it allowed protestant dissenters publicly to exercise their worship in their own way under certain regulations, it legalized their ministers, it protected them against prosecutions for non-conformity.

"Upon the whole of the case, and for the reasons assigned, the court is of opinion, that the minister, in refusing to bury this child in the manner pleaded in the articles, has acted illegally."

Judgment of Lord Brougham in Escott v. Mastin.

In Escott v. Mastin, (1 Eccles. Notes of Cases, 552,) which was an appeal from the Arches court of Canterbury, (2 Curt. 692,) in a cause of office promoted by an inhabitant of the parish of Gedney, Lincolnshire, against the Rev. Thomas Sweet Escott, vicar of that parish, for refusing to bury the corpse of the infant daughter of a parishioner, on the ground that, as the deceased had been baptized by a Wesleyan minister, who was unordained, the rite or form of baptism performed by him was to all intents and purposes null and void, and in the rubric of the Book of Common Prayer, in the Order for the Burial of the Dead, it is enjoined, that such office is not to be used for any that die 'unbaptized,' which was the alleged condition of the infant to whom burial had been refused. The judge in the court below held the offence to be established, and sentenced the defendant to be suspended for three calendar months, condemning him in the costs. From this sentence Mr. Escott appealed.

Upon such facts, Lord Brougham, after overruling an objection which had been taken to three of the witnesses, observed, "The ground is thus cleared for examining the main question between the parties; and this resolves itself into the construction of the rubric to the Burial Service. The 68th Canon is clear and distinct, attaching the penalty of suspension to a refusal of that office in any case except one, that of a person having been 'denounced excommunicate majori excommunicatione, for some grievous and notorious crime, and no man able to testify of his repentance.' But the Act of Uniformity, (Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 4.) having incorporated, as part of its provisions, the Office for the Burial of the Dead, and the rubric for that office forbidding the use of it for 'any that die unbaptized,' it will be a sufficient defence to the charge, under the 68th Canon, if the child died unbaptized. The whole question, therefore, is reduced to this: does baptism, by a person not in holy orders, possess the character of that sacrament according to the laws of the church; in other words, can any one, other than a person episcopally ordained, baptize so that the ceremony may be effectual as baptismal, though the performing it may be irregular and even censurable? Is the solemnity performed by a layman, sprinkling with water, in the name of the Trinity, valid as baptism in the view of the church, although the church may greatly disapprove of such lay interference without necessity, as she disapproves even of an ordained person performing the ceremony in a private house without necessity, and yet never scruples to recognise the rite so performed, as valid and effectual? Nothing turns upon any suggestion of heresy or schism; the alleged disqualification is the want of holy orders in the person administering the solemnity, and it is as unqualified, and not as heretical and schismatical—heretic without or schismatic within the pale of the church—that any one's competency to administer it is denied.

"The 68th Canon being that upon which this proceeding is grounded, it is necessary to consider what the law was at the date of the canon, the year 1603. Without distinctly ascertaining this, we cannot satisfactorily determine what change the rubric of 1661, adopted into the 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 4, made, and in what state it left the law on this head; because it is very possible that the same enactment of a statute, or the same direction in a rubric, bearing one meaning, may receive one construction when it deals for the first time with a given subject-matter, and have another meaning and construction when it deals with a matter that has already been made the subject of enactment or direction; and this is most specially the case where the posterior enactment or direction deals with the matter, without making any reference to the prior enactment or direction. Still more is it necessary to note the original state of the law, when it is the common law that comes in question, as well as the statute.

"The Book of Common Prayer was adopted and prescribed by the statute of 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 1, and more fully by 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 1, which 1 Eliz. c. 2, revived, after it had been repealed by 1 Mar. s. 2, c. 2; and it was further prescribed and enforced by the same act of Elizabeth, and by another made 8 Eliz. c. 1, s. 3. It is certain, then, that the Liturgy established during the interval between the first and the last of these statutes, that is, between 1548 and 1565, was in force by statutory authority down to the year 1603, (sometimes called 1603, and sometimes 1604, which is owing to the style, the date, if I recollect, being January,) when the canons in question were made, no alteration whatever having been effected during the interval. It is equally certain that no authority existed to make any alteration, inconsistent with statutory provisions, during that interval; and this consideration seems to dispose of the question which has been argued, both below and here, upon the Canon of 1575. That canon is to be taken either as professing to make an alteration of the rubric which the statute had sanctioned, in which case it can have no force, or as declaratory of the sense of the rubric; but neither would any such declaration be binding, because the legislature having adopted the rubric, and made it parcel of a statute, no other authority than a declaratory act can give it a new meaning; add to which, that the plain intendment of the rubric appears to have been adhered to, after and notwithstanding the Canon of 1575, and not the sense which that canon seems to give the rubric, and which we must indeed admit that canon purports to give it. The Canon of 1575 appears never to have excited any attention, and if it ever received the royal assent, (which is doubtful,) it certainly was not cited on either side during the controversy on the subject of baptism at the Hampton Court Conferences.

"We are, therefore, to see what the rubric prescribed at and prior to 1603, this being the statutory provision then in force; and adopting the common law prevailing for 1400 years over Christian Europe. In the first place, no prohibition of the burial service for unbaptized persons, or indeed for any class of persons, is to be found in the Liturgies of Edward and of Elizabeth. The exception of unbaptized persons and suicides first occurs in the rubric of 1661, and consequently first received the force of law from the Uniformity Act of 1662, after the Restoration. The statutes of Edward 6 and Elizabeth recognised the right of every person to burial with the church service, and the 69th Canon, enforcing this civil statutory right, only excepted persons excommunicate and impenitent. Unbaptized persons, therefore, persons baptized in no way whatever, would have had the right of burial according to the service of the church, if they were not excluded by those portions of the service which appear to regard Christians alone. Those portions would probably exclude persons not Christians; but if an unbaptized person could be regarded as a Christian, then would he not be excluded prior to the rubric and statute of 1661 and 1662.

"But, secondly, and what is much new material to our present inquiry, it is clear that the rubric, and consequently the statute down to 1603, and indeed to 1662, the date of the Uniformity Act, authorized by baptism, and placed it on the same footing with clerical baptism, in point of efficacy. The rubric, after setting forth that baptism ought to be administered publicly, and on Sundays and holidays, in order to approach as near as might be to the practice of the primitive church, which confined it to Easter and Whit Sunday, nevertheless adds, that, if necessity require, children may at all times be baptized at home. A further warning is required to be given to the people against baptizing privately, 'without great cause and necessity' and this rubric is retained in the subsequent forms of prayer, down to the present time. The rubrics of Edward and Elizabeth then proceed to lay down the rules for administering the baptismal sacrament when it is privately performed, and herein those rubrics materially differ from the subsequent ones of 1603 and 1661. They require 'them that be present to say the Lord's Prayer, if the new will suffer;' and the rubrics add, 'then one of them,' that is, any one of them that be present, 'shall name the child, and dip him in water, or pour water upon him, saying these words, "N., I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, Amen."' We may observe, in passing, that there is contemplated a great hurry in the ceremony because the expression is, 'if the time will suffer.' This of itself indicates that the circumstances are, or at least may be, such as to prevent the sending or the waiting for a minister. The rubric goes on to declare the sufficiency of baptism so performed: 'And let them not doubt but that the child so baptized is lawfully and sufficiently baptized, and ought not to be baptized again in the church.' Nevertheless, the expediency is not lost afterwards bringing the child to the church, and there presenting him to the minister, that it may be ascertained whether or not the ceremony had been lawfully performed. For this purpose, six questions are to be asked of them that bring the child: Who baptized it? Who was present? Whether they called on God for his grace? With what matter the child was baptised? With what words? And, Whether they think he was lawfully and perfectly baptised? If the answer to these questions prove that 'all things were done as they ought to be,' then the minister is to say, 'I certify you that in this case ye, (not you the minister, but ye the people,) have done well and according to due order,' and he declares the child to have been received into the number of the children of God, 'by the law of regeneration in baptism;' that is, by the sacrament previously administered in private. If, however, they which bring the child 'make an uncertain answer, and say they cannot tell what they thought, said, or did, in that great fear and trouble of mind, as oftentimes it chanceth,' then the child is to be baptised publicly, but, as it were, conditionally or provisionally, with this reserve, that the minister shall say, 'If thou be not baptised already.' This portion of the rubric is demonstrative, if the former part left any doubt, that the presence of a minister at the private ceremony was not contemplated; for if it were, what they thought, or said, or did, would be immaterial; and what the minister said and did would have formed the only subject of inquiry; not to mention, that no fear or trouble of mind, at the time of the ceremony, could prevent those who bring the child from recollecting whether there had been a minister present or not. Indeed, the question would have been differently framed, had the presence of a minister been as essential as the water and the words. It would have been asked, not merely, 'by whom, and in whose presence,' but, 'was he baptised by a minister?' There can, therefore, be no doubt whatever, that, by these earlier rubrics, the baptism is deemed valid if performed with water, and in the name of the Trinity, though by lay persons. Assuming, then, that there is no minister present, the rubric declares the baptism to be without any doubt lawfully and sufficiently administered, though in private.

"The same doctrine was held, and the practice formed upon it, in the Roman catholic church, from a very early period. It prevailed from the beginning of the third century, and though it formed the subject of controversy between the Eastern and Western churches during the succeeding period, it had become universally admitted by both in the time of St. Austin, who flourished in the latter part of the fourth century. In England, as elsewhere, it was held valid. The Constitutions of Archbishop Peccham, in Lyndwood's collection, bearing date 1281, though severely denouncing a layman who shall intrude himself into the office without necessity, yet declare the baptism valid which is celebrated by laymen, and state that it is not to be repeated. Whoever did so intrude, was denounced as guilty of 'mortal sin;' nevertheless, his act was pronounced to be valid and sufficient, and that it was not necessary that the ceremony should be repeated. Now, in all these positions, the necessity can make no kind of difference, unless in excusing the intrusion. If the rite can only be administered by clerical hands, if it be wholly void when administered by a layman, no necessity can give it validity. The consecration of the elements, for the purpose of giving the eucharist to a dying person, may be as much a matter of urgent necessity as the baptism of an infant in extremities; but, neither in the Roman catholic, nor in the reformed church, was it ever supposed that any extremity could dispense with the interposition of a priest, and enable laymen to administer the sacrament of the Lord's supper.

"The position, therefore, being undeniable, that, previous to the year 1603, and at the time the 68th Canon was made, lay baptism, though discountenanced, and even forbidden, unless in case of necessity, was yet valid if performed; and this being the common law, not the law made by statute and rubric, but by statute and rubric plainly recognised and adopted, we are to see if any change was made in that law as it thus stood.

"In the Burial Service, the rubric of 1603 made no change; but that of 1661 forbade the Burial Service in cases of suicide, excommunication, and persons unbaptised. A right formerly existing was thus taken away, at least in some cases. This makes it fit that we construe the word 'unbaptised,' strictly, or which is the same thing, that we give a large construction to 'baptised;' and, after the change in the Burial Service, it becomes the more necessary to see that there is a clear and undoubted change in the rubric relating to baptism, before we admit the baptism to be invalid which was held valid, even when the rubric of the Burial Service had not as yet taken away the rite from all who were unbaptised.

"The rubric of 1603, instead of directing 'those present' in the case of private baptism, as the former rubrics had done, directs 'the lawful minister,' to say the prayer, if time permit, and to dip or sprinkle the child, and repeat the words. The rubric of 1661 explains what shall be intended by 'lawful minister,' substituting for that expression the words, 'minister of the parish, or, in his absence, other lawful minister that can be procured.' It then prescribes a prayer to be used by the minister, which prayer is not to be found either in the Liturgies of Edward the Sixth and Elizabeth, or in that of 1603. We may pass over the rubric of 1603, both because its substance is more completely contained in that of 1661, and because, until 1662, there was no statutory authority for any change of the law which had been established at the date of 1603 (or 1604), when the canon in question was made, even if it had been quite clear that the rubric of that date had changed the former rubrics. But, as in 1662, the present Uniformity Act of 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 4, was passed, and gave force and effect to the rubric of that date, it becomes necessary to see whether or not that rubric changed the former ones, those of Edward and Elizabeth.

"Now it does not appear that any such change was effected as the case of the present appellant must assume, in order to prevail. The words are plainly directory, and do not amount to an imperative alteration of the rule then subsisting. If lay baptism was valid before the new rubric of 1661, there is nothing in that rubric to invalidate it. Generally speaking, where any thing is established by statutory provisions, the enactment of a new provision must clearly indicate an intention to abrogate the old; else both will be understood to stand together, if they may. But, more especially, where the common law is to be changed, and, most especially, the common law which a statutory provision had recognised and enforced, the intention of any new enactment to abrogate it must be plain, to exclude a construction by which both may stand together. This principle, which is plainly founded in reason and common sense, has been largely sanctioned by authority. The distinction which Lord Coke takes in one place between affirmative and negative words, giving more effect to the latter, (Co. Litt. 115 a.) has sometimes been denied, at least doubted; (W. Jones, 270; Loveless's case, before the Windsor Forest court, in 1632, in which there is a dictum of Lord Chief Justice Richardson;) Mr. Hargrave thinks, upon a misapprehension, (note, 154.) But the rule which is laid down in 2nd Inst. 200, has been adopted by all the authorities, that 'a statute made in the affirmative, without any negative expressed or implied, doth not take away the common law.' So Comyns' Dig. (Parliament. R. 23,) and he cites the case de jure ecclesiastico, (5 Rep. 5, 6,) which lays down the rule in terms. The case decides, that the penalty attached by the Uniformity Act of Elizabeth, for not reading the Common Prayer, on the second offence, does not take away the same common law penalty on the first offence. Now here the former law being this, 'Let lay baptism be valid, but let ministers only perform the rite, unless in case of great necessity;' and the new law being, 'Let lawful ministers baptise;' it must be taken as an addition to, and not a substitution for, the former, unless the intention plainly appear to make it substitutionary and not cumulative. The proof is on those who would make it substitutionary and abrogatory. But the circumstances and the context seem, on the contrary, to shew that the intention was to make the new rubric cumulative, and to leave the validity of lay baptism unaltered. The private baptism is expressly confined to cases of 'great cause and necessity,' and the want of time is expressly referred to, as being great enough possibly to prevent saying the Lord's Prayer. How then can it be expected, that time should be given to send for the minister of the parish, and, if he be absent, to procure some other minister? Doubtless, it is required that a minister shall perform the ceremony if he can be procured; but the possibility of there being none must be understood to have been contemplated. Again, it is directed that if any lawful minister, other than the minister of the parish, performed the ceremony, then the minister of the parish, when the child is brought to him, shall examine how the ceremony had been performed. The questions prescribed by the former rubrics are materially changed;—two are left out—that respecting calling for grace, and that respecting their opinion of the ceremony having been completed. But an important preamble is inserted, before the question as to the matter and the words: 'Because some things essential to this sacrament may happen to be omitted, through fear or haste, in such times of extremity, therefore, I demand further, "With what matter and with what words was this child baptized?"' Now it is remarkable, that the essentials here spoken of are the water and the reference to the Trinity; nothing whatever is said of the minister being essential. The questions as to who baptized, and who were present, are given without any preamble at all, indicating that the water and the invocation of the Trinity are essentials, while the presence of a minister is only expedient; a matter to be inquired into for the purpose of correction or censure if it was omitted without necessity; but as essential, as those things wherein consist the very rite itself, the water and the words. The water and the words are afterwards again stated to be 'essential parts of baptism' in the rubric which provides for the case of a doubtful baptism, sometimes called conditional. If it were assumed, that in every case a lawful minister was necessary, and that there could be no baptism without his presence, the only necessary question to be answered by those who brought the child would be, whether such minister officiated or not, for it might be assumed that he used the matter and the words prescribed, inasmuch as he would be punishable if he did not. The whole direction as to conditional baptism is very material to be regarded, and no part more so than the last rubric relating to it. If the answers are uncertain, the baptism is to be made, but provisionally or conditionally. What kind of uncertainty is contemplated? If a minister had been essential, surely any uncertainty as to who performed the ceremony would have been specified as a ground of conditional baptism. But nothing of the kind is to be found in the rubric of 1603 and 1661, any more than in those of Edward and Elizabeth. Nay, the uncertainty is more specifically confined to the water and the words in the later than in the earlier rubrics: 'If it cannot appear that the child was baptized with water, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which,' adds the rubric, 'are essential parts of baptism,' then—and then only—is the child to be baptized conditionally.

STAT. 3 & 4

"The question directed to be put, as to who baptized the child, clearly proves nothing as to the necessity of a minister, for another question immediately follows, which refers to a matter that must, on all hands, be admitted to be anything rather than essential, namely, 'Who were present at the ceremony?' And if it be said that this might be asked, not as a substantive question, the answer to which is essentially necessary, but as a question, the answer to which may tend to facilitate other inquiries, and to exclude other answers; in the same way it may be said, that the answer to the first question

'Who baptised the child?' may be used simply for the purpose of explanation as to the really essential matters, the water and the words.

"The changes made in the rubric, touching uncertain and conditional baptism, are mainly relied upon to show that the rubrics of 1603 and 1661 invalidated lay baptism; and certainly those changes afford the only countenance lent to the negative argument. But they are wholly insufficient to work an abrogation of the former law. The omission of the question, 'Whether they (the people) called for grace and succour in that necessity?' is said to show that the people were no longer to officiate, but only the minister, who had no occasion for that succour. Yet besides that this seems a very gratuitous position, the persons present were inquired of, and they surely were not material. The question, as to the opinion of the party bringing the child, is also omitted; but it is not omitted in the rubric of 1603, which, nevertheless, is supposed to negative the validity of lay baptism as much as the rubric of 1661. Perhaps the most material change in this part of the service is in the certificate, which is no longer that 'Ye have done well,' but that 'All is well done.' But this, though in the direction of the argument against and lending colour to it, is manifestly too slender a foundation on which to ground any inference. We must always bear in mind, that it was the intention of those who framed the new rubric to discountenance all baptism except by a minister, and to assume, as far as possible, that it should by a minister be performed, and the omission of whatever was not quite necessary, and whatever needlessly contemplated a lay administration of the rite, was a natural consequence of this design. But if it had been the intention of those who framed the rubric to declare lay baptism ineffectual, some express declaration to that effect would have been introduced.

"It is unnecessary to give instances of the difference between positive directions, nay express prohibitions, and such prohibitions as make the thing forbidden to all intents and purposes void. If it were necessary to point out instances of that distinction, the kindred subject of the marriage rite affords one too remarkable to be passed over. There is hardly any country where some solemnity is not required by the directions of the law; there are many in which a departure from the order prescribed by the law is strictly forbidden, and under penalties; but in most protestant countries the irregular marriage is valid, and in catholic countries also, up to a comparatively recent date, that of the council of Trent, though it might be censurable, it was valid, without the interposition of a priest, and without any ecclesiastical solemnity whatever. England, before the Marriage Act, 26 Geo. 3, c. 33, commonly called Lord Hardwicke's Act, affords one instance of this; Scotland to this day affords another; nay, the existing Marriage Act, 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, presents us with an instance still more remarkable, and bearing more closely upon our present argument, for some of the marriages, to prevent which was the main object of this as of the former act, are allowed by this latter act to be valid, and are only valid because they fall not by express declaration within the 22nd section, which certainly confines the invalidity to the cases specified in that section. But if it be said that baptism is a sacrament, which marriage is not, let it be remembered that, in the Romish church, marriage too was a sacrament, and retained its character as such, though performed without the intervention of a priest, or any solemnity of the church. Dalrymple v. Dalrymple, 2 Hagg. 64, and the three authorities there cited.

"The opinions and practice of the church, from the date of the canon, 1603, down to that of the Uniformity Act of Charles the Second, and afterwards till near the end of Queen Anne's reign, appear to have been clear upon this head. The validity of lay baptism, notwithstanding the change in the rubric, was not questioned until about 1712, when the controversy arose, and some eminent divines took part against its validity. It is unnecessary to examine the authorities in detail. We may observe, that there seems no comparison between the number and the weight of those who espoused the opposite sides of the question. There are very few indeed who can be said to give a clear and explicit opinion against the validity, while those who maintain it lay down the doctrine with the most perfect distinctness. The substance of the conclusions to which they come, and the testimony which they bear to the practice, may be well given in the words of a writer no less renowned for his learning and judgment than his eloquence. 'Sith the church of God,' says the judicious Hooker, (Ecclesiastical Polity, b. 5, s. 62,) 'hath hitherto always constantly maintained that to re-baptize them which are known to have received true baptism, is unlawful; that if baptism seriously be administered in the same element and with the same form of words which Christ's Institution teacheth, there is no other defect in the world that can make it frustrate, or deprive it of the nature of a true sacrament; and lastly, that baptism is only then to be re-administered when the first delivery thereof is void in regard to the fore-alleged imperfections, and no other,' that is, the words and the matter; 'shall we now, in the case of baptism, which, having, both for matter and form, the substance of Christ's Institution, is by a fourth sort of men,' (he had mentioned, with more or less censure, the errors of some in the primitive church, of the Donatists and of the Anabaptists,) 'voided for the only defect of ecclesiastical authority in the minister, think it enough that they blow away the force thereof with the bare strength of their very breath, by saying, "We take such baptism to be no more the sacrament of baptism than any other ordinary bathing to be a sacrament?"' And he then goes on to shew how 'many things may be upheld, being done, although in part done otherwise than positive rigour and strictness did require.'

"The clear and unqualified opinion upon the point, and post litem motam, of the two metropolitans and fourteen other prelates, has also been properly referred to, and is no doubt of great weight. But the question is not to be decided by a reference to the opinions, however respectable, of individuals eminent for their learning, or distinguished by their station in the church; and these authorities are chiefly valuable as bearing testimony to the fact, that the construction of the rubrics of 1603 and 1661 was acted upon, which construction assumed no change to have taken place in the former law, the common law of all Christendom, before the reformation of the Anglican church; and both before and after that happy event, the law of the same church, up to the date of the canons of 1603,—a law which was recognised by the statutes of Edward and Elizabeth, and which, as nothing but express enactment could abrogate, so we might the rather expect to find contemporaneous usage confirm, when no abrogation had been effected.

"Nor is it necessary that we should strengthen the conclusions to which a strict construction of the law has led, by pointing out the inconsistent or even absurd consequences which would follow from an opposite doctrine. If only a lawful minister can baptize, then, as it is also contended, that this description only applies to those who are regularly and episcopally ordained, it will follow, that none can be capable of clerical functions who have not themselves been baptized by ministers so ordained; and hence some of the greatest lights of the church have held her highest offices unbaptized—have administered that sacrament invalidly, and have had no right to the offices of the church at their interment: a doctrine which would lead, and inevitably, to the inference that Bishop Butler and Archbishop Secker were never baptized; that the latter, in baptizing George the Third, acted without authority, and that both were disentitled to the burial service, as unbaptized persons, is at least well calculated to make us pause before we admit it to be the law of the land, and of the church.

"But it is not less fitted to excite doubts of its soundness before examination, when we reflect that another inevitable consequence would also flow from its admission,—the exclusion from the church's pale of all dissenters, and of all foreigners who have been baptized otherwise than by ministers of episcopal ordination. No lex loci is set up, or can be pretended to work any exception in their favour. The rubric, if it applies to any, applies to them, and unless they shall have been rebaptized, they can neither be ordained, should they embrace our tenets, nor buried with the rites of our church, should they depart this life within our territory. All these topics, however, are superfluous, when the question has been sifted upon its true merits, and brought to the test of a more rigorous examination, as was done both in the present case by the court below, and in the former instance before the late learned and able judge of the Arches court, Sir John Nicholl.

"The case of Kemp v. Wicker, (3 Phill.

264.) in 1809, was in every respect, as regards the facts, similar to the present. It underwent a full discussion; the only difference was in the course pursued by the defendant in his pleadings, which was more commendable than that adopted in this case; and the learned judge pronounced an elaborate judgment upon the point now before the court, as to the merits, neither of the preliminary objections having been taken. That judgment does not appear to have given any dissatisfaction in the profession; on the contrary, it is believed to have carried along with it the opinion of lawyers in both the courts christian and the courts of common law. We can hardly avoid attaching great weight to a decision pronounced by such an authority, so long acquiesced in, so little objected to, and, generally speaking, so much respected, although no decision has hitherto been given on the same question in any court of the last resort.

"It is impossible to mention this judgment of Sir John Nicholl, without adverting to the indecorous terms in which it has been assailed by some reverend persons, who have taken a part in the controversy, and whose zeal, honest no doubt, and conscientious, has outstripped their knowledge, and is so overmatched their charity. If those feelings had only found a vent in vague charges against the decision, as full of 'ignorance and error,' and even 'impiety,' this matter have been passed over, as the effusion of a temper heated beyond the bounds of reason with the violence unhappily incident to theological warfare. But an imputation upon the venerable judge, of 'misquoting' the canon of 1575, and that 'with the grossest mis-statements,' cannot be so easily passed over; and it is fit that we deny entirely the justice of the charge. He gives the summary of the article, and his abridgement of it, and suppresses no part at all material to the argument. Some of his accusers have made a much greater alteration of his text in getting his judgment; yet he would have been more just, at least more charitable, had he lived to see this attack and this citation, than to charge its authors with 'the grossest mis-statements.'

"The court below justly held that, if the penalty of the canon had been incurred, no discretion is left in awarding its infliction. It appears to us, also, that the costs were properly directed to be paid. The appellant had taken a course which was wholly unnecessary for raising the question of his baptism, upon which alone his defence was rested, as far as the merits were concerned, or for raising the preliminary objection to the promovee's rights. Both the one and the other of these points were distinctly raised upon the articles, and might have been disposed of by meeting that allegation alone, and disposed of at a comparatively trifling expense. In Kemp v. Wicker, (Ibid.) that better course was pursued. The articles, there as here, had detailed the circumstances offered to be proved, and the defendant at once opposed the admission of them, contending that, be the facts all true as alleged, he had acted lawfully, and was guilty of no offence.

This might have been just as easily done in the present case; but it has not been done; on the contrary, a proceeding has been resorted to greatly increasing both the delay and expense, and wholly unnecessary for raising the only questions intended to be discussed between the parties.

"The sentence appealed from must, therefore, be affirmed, in all its parts, and the appellant must further pay the costs of this appeal.

"The strange misapprehensions, which have been entertained by some worthy men touching the nature and grounds of this proceeding, and the force of the sentence that has closed it, seem to impose upon us the duty of stating in what the offence consists, and what authority the courts christian exercise respecting it. The notion has been ventilated, that the court in this case assumes to direct clergymen as to their spiritual duties, and to bind them, (as it has been termed,) by ordering what they shall do in future. It has been also suggested by high ecclesiastical authority, (a reverend prelate so stated in 1826,) in reference to the decision of 1809, that they who think the sentence contrary to the rubric, may conscientiously submit to the law as interpreted by the judge, or may not less 'conscientiously refuse to read the service, if prepared to risk the expense of prosecution, and make the ultimate appeal.' Now, let it be once for all understood, that the court has never in these cases assumed any such office as that of dictating to, or directing, or even warning, clergymen touching the discharge of their duties. Nor has it interfered, nor does it in any way occupy itself, with the spiritual portion of their sacred office. But the law has required clergymen to do certain things, under a certain penalty, which it has annexed to disobedience; and the same law has required the judge to enforce that penalty, when his office is promoted by a competent party; and he (the judge) is left without any choice whether he shall or shall not exercise his judicial functions. Nor let it be imagined that any one's conscience is thus forced. Whoever conscientiously disagrees with the court in the construction put upon the rubric, may, if he also conscientiously thinks that he cannot yield obedience to the law as delivered by the court, give up an office to which the law has annexed duties that his conscience forbids him to perform. The case of such clergymen is not peculiar. Persons in a judicial station have, and very recently, felt scruples about administering oaths in the discharge of their magisterial functions. What course did they pursue to seek relief for their conscience, without violating their duty as good citizens? They did not complain that their conscience was forced; they did not retain the emoluments of a station of which their conscience forbade them to discharge the duties; they sacrificed their interests to their duty, and gave way to those who could honestly fill the place, and honestly hold the office, by performing its appointed functions."

Extract from a Charge of the Bishop of Exeter, respecting the Judgment in Escott v. Mastin.

VICT. c. 86.

A variety of opinions exist, as to the effect of the foregoing judgment; and the following extract from the Bishop of Exeter's charge delivered to the clergy of the diocese of Exeter, at his lordship's triennial visitation in June, July, August, and September, 1842, will illustrate the opinions which prevail among a large body of the clergy, respecting some of the doctrines propounded in Escott v. Mastin by the judicial committee of the Privy Council, and the dissatisfaction which exists, that doctrinal questions of faith should receive adjudication from members of the legal profession, without the authority of co-adjutors selected from the episcopal bench.

"In a cause, which has recently excited more than ordinary interest throughout the land, by reason of the great theological and spiritual questions which were mixed up in it, final judgment was given by an ex-lord chancellor, an ex-lord chief justice of the court of Common Pleas, a pulsome judge of the same court, and the judge of the high court of Admiralty—four men of high character and very high attainments, but not exactly such, as any one man in the realm would have selected, to ventilate the questions, which they, whether necessarily or unnecessarily, connected with the point they had to decide.

"Of that judgment, you will not suspect me of any inclination to speak with disrespect; for it does, in truth, confirm and sanction the view, which I have been in the habit of stating to those among you, who have, from time to time, applied to me for a solution of their doubts, in respect to the burial of infants baptized by Wesleyans. But the extraneous matters, on which the learned judges thought fit to put forth their opinions, are of too grave importance to the church, to be carelessly heard, or lightly passed over: and this alone is a sufficient reason for a bishop saying something on them to his clergy. Moreover, I apprehend, that the effect of the judgment itself is commonly very much misconceived; and therefore it is desirable that you should be informed what it really is. It amounted to no more than this, that 'a minister may not refuse to bury, with the office of the church, the corpse of an infant baptized by a layman.'

"As the court stated, 'nothing turned upon any suggestion of heresy or schism; the alleged disqualification was the want of holy orders in the person ministering.'

"Now, this consideration must very much mitigate any alarm, which the judgment, before it was understood, may have excited within the church—as well as abate somewhat of the tone of triumph, with which it is said to have been hailed out of the church. In the case decided, the deceased infant had been baptized by a Wesleyan teacher; of whom it was not said, in the allegation of the defendant, that he was either heretic or schismatic. Of course, therefore, the court regarded him as neither one nor the other. Had schism been pleaded, as affecting the efficacy of the baptism, the court must have noticed it. Whether such a plea would have altered the judgment, it would be presumptuous in me to conjecture. It is enough to say, that the judgment left this very important point just where it was. It only decided, I repeat, that a minister is bound to bury an infant, who had been baptized by a layman. It did not so much as decide, that he is bound to bury an adult, who, having been so baptized, had never sought to have the deficiencies of his baptism duly supplied. This point would still remain undecided, even though the layman administering baptism, without authority, were himself a member of the church.

"But much graver questions remain. What is the effect of baptism administered out of the church, that is, by heretics or schismatics? Though sufficient to render rebaptization unlawful, does it confer all that baptism in the church confers? I speak not now of the spiritual grace of that blessed sacrament, though much, very much, here presses on our thoughts; but I speak not now of this most interesting point—it is somewhat foreign to our subject, which is confined to external privileges. Does the baptism of adults by heretics or schismatics give to the baptized—does such baptism, even of infants, give to them, when the age of infancy shall be past, admission into the catholic church, a title to its communion, participation in its privileges? If it does not, what is necessary to supply its deficiencies?"

"These are questions which must, I apprehend, be seriously considered, and satisfactorily answered, before any sober judge will venture to decide, that a minister is bound to use the office of burial over the body of one baptized by a heretic or schismatic, who shall have continued to live, and died, an adult out of communion with the church. Yet the possibility of any such questions seems scarcely to have presented itself to either of the two courts, which pronounced the judgment in the late case. If it had, they must have abstained from using words, somewhat larger than the occasion called for; words, which may mislead the unwary into a belief, that they have decided questions, which do, in truth, remain untouched; in particular, they would not have intimated, that, if unlawful baptism is valid so far as to make rebaptization unlawful, it is fully and completely valid to all effects whatever.

"But as such a conclusion can be drawn only from their reasoning, not from the judgment, it is fairly open to controversy. I, therefore, scruple not to affirm, that, should such ever be the decision of any court, it will be contrary (I do not say to the ecclesiastical law of this land, for of that it would be presumptuous in me to speak thus confidently, but) to the uniform doctrine of the primitive fathers, to the decrees of councils, to the whole stream of authorities respecting the effect of heretical and schismatical baptism, including the most eminent of those writers, on whom both courts relied for the soundness of their own dicta on this point.

"I will mention only one, but one who, in such a matter, is indecisive—I mean the incomparably learned Bingham. I refer to him the more readily, because he has never been esteemed too high a churchman.—He is cited both by the learned judge of the Arches, and by the court above, as an authority for the validity of unlawful baptism. And, without all doubt, he asserts its validity. But does he assert its sufficiency? So far from it, that, although he was one of those who in the great controversy, which took place a hundred and thirty years ago—that very controversy to which both courts referred as of much importance to their reasoning—though Bingham was among those who then maintained the validity of schismatical baptism against Lawrence, East, Waterland, and others, yet he admitted, or rather he abjured, by a most elaborate research into the history of all ages of the church, that such baptism, though valid as far as to preclude rebaptization, had yet very great deficiencies; that it gives not spiritual grace, nor remission of sins; nay, that it does not give (what is more to our immediate purpose) actual admission into the church, nor an actual right to church privileges, though it gives a right to claim admission into the church, and to its privileges, on submitting to the due course for having its deficiencies supplied,—which was by imposition of hands, and invocation of the Holy Spirit, upon repentance, and return to the catholic church. He further says, 'The rules and the practice of the church of England for these last two hundred years' he wrote a hundred and thirty years ago, 'are clear: no rule was made that such as were not baptized by a lawful minister should be rebaptized; but they were required to receive the bishop's confirmation, and then were admitted to the Eucharist and the privilege of Christian burial, neither of which were allowed to unbaptized persons.' [Schol. Hist. Lay Baptism, P. ii. Ep. Ded. oct. p. cxlv.] I include these last words in my citation, lest I be accused of keeping back something which may sound, at first hearing, unfavourable to my argument. They have, in truth, nothing to do with it; having been introduced by Bingham in confirmation of his own judgment, on the other part of the question, the validity of schismatical baptism. His reasoning is, that imposition of hands in the church being held to be both necessary, and sufficient, to supply the deficiencies of such baptism, and to admit to the Eucharist and to Christian burial, to which unbaptized persons could not be admitted, it is plain the persons who have received such baptism are not unbaptized.]

"When such is the language of the highest authority which can be produced, I think I shall not be going too far in saying that the point really decided has left the pretence of heretics and schismatics to confer, by their baptism, a right of burial by the members of the church, very questionable at the utmost, if indeed questionable.

of Bingham's. It said, 'Nothing can be more clear, from the whole history of the church, from its very early ages, or at least from the time when St. Augustine flourished in the fourth and fifth centuries, down to the time of the Reformation, and from that time down to the year 1712, than that the baptism of persons who were baptized by any person, other than a lawful minister, was considered to be valid and sufficient.' [Martin v. Beckett, 2 Curt. 777.] This is strong language: we might have supposed that the last word had dropped per incuriam, had it not been immediately repeated, once and again, in such a manner, as to shew that it was used purposely and advisedly; for thus the court proceeds: 'And if it was valid and sufficient at that time, it is equally valid and sufficient now.'

"Here, then, we have the court and our great ecclesiastical antiquarian diametrically opposed to each other, on a matter peculiarly belonging to the learning of the latter. In such a case, we should not be deemed deficient in due respect to the court, if we rather deferred to the authority of Bingham; even though it were left a question merely of authority. But the court has not left it entirely thus. It has cited St. Augustine, and the conference at Lambeth in 1712, in testimony of the accuracy of its own statement.

"I will meet its statement respecting St. Augustine with a citation from that father even where he is speaking as favourably as possible of unlawful baptism: 'Nequaquam dubitarem habere eos baptismum, qui ubicumque et a quibuscunque illud verbis evangelicis consecratum, sine sua simulatione, et cum aliqua fide accepissent: quanquam eis ad salutem spirituales non prodesset, si caritate caruissent, qua Catholicæ inserentur ecclesiæ.' [Aug. de Bapt. l. vii. 53.]

"Now this shows undeniably, that baptism by unlawful ministers, is not, in the judgment of St. Augustine, sufficient of itself, either to confer spiritual grace, or to insert into the catholic church. It also shews that, even in his time, it was a question of great doubt, whether such baptism was indeed so far valid, that it ought not to be repeated. He says, that the question had not been so decided by the church: but that, if he were present in any council, in which it were considered, such would be his judgment.

"So much for St. Augustine, the early authority of the court of Arches for its opinion, that 'Baptism by any person other than a lawful minister was considered,' not only 'valid,' but also 'sufficient.'

"I will now look to its modern authority for the same statement, the conference at Lambeth of 1712. That conference put forth a declaration, signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury and many of the bishops, 'That, in conformity with the judgments and practice of the catholic church, and of the church of England in particular, such persons as have been already baptized in or with water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, ought not to be baptized again.'

"Such is the declaration of 1712—on the face of it, very far short of the statement of the court of Arches. It declares that baptism, however unlawfully ministered, is valid, so that it ought not to be repeated; but it says not one word about its sufficiency. Have we any evidence to shew the judgment of this same conference on this latter point, the sufficiency of unlawful baptism? Yes, a most undeniable one, which I proceed to adduce.

"Bingham, only two years after the conference, published the second part of his 'Scholastic History of Lay Baptism,' and dedicated it to Trelawney, bishop of Winchester. In the epistle dedicatory we read the following passage:

"Your lordship did not so much as know what subject I was upon, till it was finished; nor did I perfectly know your lordship's sentiments upon the point, till you were pleased to honour me with a letter of thanks for my book, and tell me that you exceedingly approved of it; and particularly that part of it, which treats of the deficiency of heretical and schismatical baptisms, and of the obligation those, who are so baptized, lie under to return to the unity of the church, in order to have the defects of their baptism supplied by imposition of hands in confirmation: which was the usual way of supplying such defects, according to the general rule and practice of the ancient church. Your lordship was pleased also to acquaint me, with what I did not understand before, that all the bishops of both provinces were unanimously of the same opinion which I had defended, and thought there were other ways of supplying a faulty baptism, than by rebaptisation, if given in due form by a layman: and though your lordship did not consent to subscribe the resolution, which was then intended to be drawn up, yet it was not because you dissented from them in the main of the determination, but because you thought it more proper to have added the words "in cases of necessity;" which are cases less liable to exception, whose deficiency, whatever it be, may most certainly be rectified by confirmation." [Bingham, part ii. Schol. Hist. Lay Bapt. Ep. Ded. p. cxlvii. oct.]

"So much for the statement of the court of Arches respecting the judgment of the conference of 1712, that 'Baptism by other than a lawful minister is both valid and sufficient.'

"The higher court, while it speaks with great respect of the judgment of that conference, states it, however, to be 'chiefly valuable, as bearing testimony to the fact, that the construction of the rubrics of 1603 and 1661 was acted upon; which construction assumed no change to have taken place in the former law, the common law of all Christendom before the Reformation; a law which was recognised by the statutes of Edward and Elizabeth, and which nothing but express enactment could abrogate.

"This, therefore, is the law, on which the court founds its judgment.

"Let us see what it states this law to be; 'The statutes of Edward VI. and Elizabeth,' it says, 'recognised the right of every person to burial with the church service; not even excepting excommunicates.

"Now, with unfeigned reluctance, which nothing but a sense of duty could overcome, I humbly submit, that those statutes do not recognise that power which the court here affirms; and for this plain reason, that 'the former law—the common law of all Christendom, before the Reformation'—in other words the canon law, which, in this particular, was everywhere received, and, especially, in this country, was the very contrary to what the court represents it to have been. Instead of giving to 'every person a right to burial with the church service,' it expressly forbade such burial of any who died not in the communion, and in the peace of the church: 'Quibus non communicamus vivis, nec mortuis communicamus.' It went further; it commands, that, if the bodies of any of these had been so buried, they should be disinterred, and cast out of the church burial-ground. Nay, it pronounced excommunication ipso facto against every one, who, in contempt of the keys of the church, should dare to bury persons of this sort in churches or cemeteries. [Extra l. 3, t. 28, c. 12. 'Sacris est canonibus institutum, ut quibus non communicamus vivis, non communicemus defunctis, et ut earent ecclesiastica sepultura, qui prius erant ab ecclesiastica unitate præcisi, nec nisi in articulo mortis ecclesie reconciliati fuerint. Unde, si contingat interdum, quod vel excommunicatorum corpora, per violentiam aliquorum, vel alio casu, in cæmeterio tumultentur, si ab aliorum corporibus discerni poterunt, exhumari debent, et procul ab ecclesiastica sepultura jactari.'

"[Pursuant to the second part of this law, there is, in Archbishop Winchelsey's Register, (Winch. 296 b.,) an express order 'to dig up an excommunicate, who had been buried in the churchyard.' Gibson, 450.

"[And no historical fact is more certain than that the bones of Wicliff were judicially disinterred and cast out.]

"Having thus stated what I believe to be really the canon law on this subject—adopted in England, and therefore part of our common law—I turn again to the court's statement of the right which, 'by the common law of all Christendom before the Reformation, and recognised by the statutes of Edward VI. and Elisabeth,' every person, not excepting excommunicates, had in 1603, when the canon was made,—a right to burial with the service of the church. If there could otherwise be a doubt whether this be the court's meaning, that doubt is removed by what it afterwards says of 'the rubric of 1661, which forbade the burial service in cases of suicide, excommunicates, and persons unbaptised. A right formerly existing was thus taken away, at least in some cases;' [vide Escott v. Mastin, 2 Curt. 692.] the cases therein specified.

"Now, in the face of the court's dictum on this subject, (fortunately it was no more than a dictum.) I venture to repeat my denial, that the statutes to which it refers, the 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 1, and 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 1, and 1 Elis. c. 2, and 8 Elis. c. 1, recognise any such universal right; and for the reason which I have already given, that those statutes say nothing in derogation, much less in abrogation, of the received canon law, which, as the court says, was 'the common law of all Christendom.'

"But I must go further; I must contend that the statute law of England, in 1663, did itself forbid the burial service of the church to be performed over the corpse of an excommunicate.

"I refer to a statute of Elisabeth, which the court did not think it necessary to notice, though by its very title it might seem to invite notice in such an inquiry; I mean the 13th Elisabeth, c. 12, entitled, 'An Act for Ministers to be of sound Religion,'—the statute, which established the 'Articles of Religion of the Church of England;' and which, because it established them, is made by the Act of Union with Scotland to be an essential part of the treaty of union, and a fundamental law of the land.

"Now of these Articles, thus made to be an especial part of our statute law, the 13rd, entitled, 'Of Excommunicate Persons, how they are to be avoided,' runs as follows: 'That person, which by open denunciation of the church is rightly cut off from the unity of the church and excommunicate, ought to be taken of the whole multitude of the faithful as an heathen and publican.' Unless, therefore, a heathen is entitled to burial with the service of the church, which no one yet has had the hardihood to affirm, neither is an excommunicate.

"So much for the law, common and statute, applicable to this point. That both the one and the other are contrary to the statement of the court, may be the less satisfactory to the very eminent persons who composed it, if an opinion be correct, which I scruple not to submit, that, supposing the law were what they have stated it to be, the judgment pronounced by them, irreversible as it is in effect, might not be altogether sustainable in reason.

"For if 'every person,' not even excepting excommunicates, had, as the court states, a 'statutory right to burial with the service of the church,' it follows that the 68th Canon, on which the late suit was founded, taking away that right in the case of excommunicates, must be ipso facto void: for I need hardly say that a canon purporting to extinguish a right created or recognised by the law of the land, is not worth the paper on which it is printed. But, if this be so, how can a criminal proceeding be founded on such a canon?

"The only way to escape the consequences herein suggested, seems to be, the putting a construction on the canon, which is not very obvious, nor very satisfactory, especially when the purpose must be the sustaining of a criminal prosecution. Could it, then, for this purpose, be maintained, that when the canon says, 'No minister shall refuse to bury any corpse that is brought to the church; and if he shall refuse to bury such corpse, except the party deceased were denounced excommunicate, majori excommunicatione;' could it, I ask, be maintained, for the sole purpose of sustaining a criminal prosecution, that this exception is not meant to deny the right of the excommunicate to burial, but only to exempt the minister from canonical punishment, if he set that right at naught?

"Happily, the canon needs no such strained construction. In its natural and unforced meaning, it is, as we have seen, in perfect accordance with both the common and the statute law, as that law existed when the canon was made.

"Happily, too, the judgment is not only irreversible, but may, we doubt not, be shewn to be sound; though the particular line of argument pursued by the court be not such as commands unqualified assent. [I venture to submit, that a baptized infant, even though baptized in a schismatical or heretical congregation, being entitled to reception into the church, and to all its privileges, whensoever he shall seek imposition of hands, and do what else the church may require,—if he die, before he come to years of reason, ought to be regarded like all other infants dying in infancy; that justice, as well as charity, bids us presume of such infant, that, if he had been permitted to live, he would have done what his duty required—and, therefore, that he is to be dealt with accordingly.

"[I once entertained strong doubts respecting those infants, who are baptized by persons heretical in the fundamental article of the Trinity,—thinking that, as such persons do not believe in the divinity of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, their baptism cannot be deemed baptism in that holy name. I answered accordingly one or two of my clergy, who applied to me for solution of their own doubts on this point. I think it necessary, therefore, thus to declare, that further consideration, and the balance of the authorities of the early church, have brought me to a different mind.

"[I say, 'the balance of authorities;'—for, undoubtedly, that side of the question, which numbers St. Athanasius and St. Hilary among its advocates, cannot be said to be without grave authority. But not only the greater number of Fathers, but the canons of councils,—viz. II. Constantinople, Arles, Laodicea, Trullo—make the balance incline strongly to the other side. The 8th canon of the council of Nice was differently interpreted, according to the different views of those who interpreted it.

"[St. Augustine briefly states his view of the matter to be, that the church does not, and ought not to, rebaptize those who have been baptized, with the words of our Lord's institution, by any heretics whomsoever; because such baptism is not properly the baptism of him who ministers, but Christ's. See Bingham, Schol. Hist. &c. p. 1, c. 1, s. 20.]

"The exception in the canon must yet detain us for a few moments; for, if I mistake not, it will be found to have a very important bearing on the main question.

"It appears to me to show very plainly the description of persons to whom alone the indefinite phrase 'any corpse which shall be brought' must be understood to apply—namely, those, and only those, who may, for sufficient reasons, incur sentence of excommunication—in other words, members of the church; for these, and only these, can be excommunicated—the censures of the church having scope and direction only within the church and over its own members.

"This just principle, which always guided the ancient catholic church in all its discipline, and is, indeed, of the very essence of that discipline, was particularly illustrated in its dealing with those who had been baptized in heresy or schism. When any of them, being brought to the knowledge of the truth, sought reconciliation with the church, they were not required to go through the same stages of penance, as the canons required of penitents in the church; 'But they seem,' says Bingham, [Ecc. Ant. xix. c. 2, s. 7,] 'to have been reconciled in a more compendious way, more suited to their state and condition, as strangers and foreigners, now just entering within the pale of the church.'

"Surely, this same principle may, and ought to, be taken as the true rule of interpreting the canons of our own church; for it flows from, and realises, the express injunction of Holy Scripture, that we 'judge not them that are without,' but leave them 'to their own Master,' to whom 'they stand or fall.'

"And here, speaking of 'the pale of the church,' I am sorry to be obliged to remark on one unhappy sentence, which is stated, in the report, to have fallen from the higher court in delivering its judgment; for it went the whole length of subverting the most approved, and, until so denied, we should have thought the most undeniable, principle respecting schismatics—'Heretic without, or schismatic within the pale of the church'—is given as the language of the court.

"That so portentous, and, considering the authority to which it is ascribed, so mischievous a description of schismatic, would not, even in the most incautious moment, be really uttered in such a place, we have some special right to hope, because it is expressly contradicted by the very law which the court administers in the last resort. The view taken of schism by the canon law, is, that so far as any are schismatics, so far they are out of the church. It is thus expressed by Lyndwood, of whom the learned judge of the Arches tells us that 'he is the standard authority on all points of the canon law which may arise in the administration of justice in these courts:' 'Schisma est recessus ab ecclesia, vel in parte, vel in toto.' Again, 'Schisma est illicita divisio per inobedientiam ab unitate ecclesie facta.' Lyndwood, 284.

"I have been compelled to notice this strange dictum, because it has actually been cited to me by one of my clergy (who had published certain notions concerning schism, which called for my animadversion) as 'the view taken by the highest ecclesiastical court of the land, the judicial committee of Privy Council. 'In the luminous judgment delivered by this august tribunal,' said he, 'the distinction is clearly taken between a heretic and a schismatic; a "heretic" is one "without," a "schismatic" is one "within" the church.' [That in a large and improper sense of the word church, including all whom God hath called by the revelation of his truth from the unbelieving world, a schismatic may be said to be within it, no one will selves, we cannot admit them to communion in religious offices with us. Is there in this any real hardship to them? or any real want of charity in us?

"Let us see, in the instance of burial, to what it amounts.

"Heretics and schismatics have the same right of interment in the parochial burial grounds as we have. [This seems to have been ruled in Res v. Taylor, Willes 537, : 'The doctrine there laid down,' as v the court of Arches in the late s, that the common law right of the churchyard belonged to r; but that the manner in was to be performed, was rital court, and there Escott, 2 Curt. 766-7.]

their own meeting-houses, burial they choose. If they office of the church, they are quite erty to use it; only they must not use in our churches, or in the churchyard. This is the amount of the grievance, and simply to state it is to expose its frivolity.

"But they will not be satisfied unless the ministers of the church perform the office, and treat them as members of our communion. Why is this? Why are they anxious for the services of ministers, whose ministry they either deny or usurp? or rather, both usurp and deny? Or, why do they claim to be admitted to the privileges of a community, which they do not value sufficiently to seek to belong to it?

"The real truth is plain. Their only grievance is, that the church exists; and so long as it shall continue to exist, its existence will be, must be, felt a reproach by those who have abandoned it.

"But we are told, that, whatever be the merits of the question, the laws of the church itself require its ministers to perform these offices to dissenters, and they have a right to enforce obedience to those laws.

"That the laws of the church do indeed require this, may be found not quite so clear as they choose to represent; and to prove it will need something more authoritative than a mere dictum, (if there have been such dictum), even of the highest court. But, if the laws of the church do, indeed, require its members to perform its offices to those who are not of its communion, can we doubt that this is caused by those laws having been made at a time when such a thing as tolerated heresy or schism was not even thought of?

"In the short interval which elapsed between the passing of the first Toleration Act and the discontinuance of the sittings of convocation, none of the claims which are now harassing the church were ever put forward, or even contemplated; else, we cannot doubt that due provision would have been then made, to meet the new state of things, and to prevent a law, which was liberally and wisely designed as a relief to conscientious dissenters, from being abused, as an engine for the persecution of the church.

"In short, the offices of the church having been devised for members of the church, the church ought to have the power of declaring who are not its members, and, therefore, who of burial itself? In other words, ought it to be used in the case of those to whom it is manifestly unfitted—to persons, capable of its blessing?

"No man who respects the principles, or the practice, of the church of Christ, from and through all antiquity, will hesitate how this question must be answered. 'This office of burial,' says Bingham, 'belonged only to the fideles, or communicants; that is, such as died either in the full communion of the church, or else, if they were excommunicate, were yet in a disposition to communicate by accepting, and submitting to, the rules of penance and discipline in the church.' [Eccl. Ant. B. xxiii. c. 3, s. 23.]

"In truth, such a claim as we are said to be threatened with, on the misunderstood authority of the late judgment, is simply this—that the church, and the church only, shall cease to have a peculiar communion of its own; shall cease to have its own rules for its own guidance; shall cease to have any special marks whereby to distinguish itself; shall cease to perform any special offices to its own members.

"For, our offices, be it borne in mind, are designed for persons belonging to a certain body, united together by certain terms of communion. Why are we to be compelled to disregard the appropriate nature of these offices, and to abandon these terms of communion, at the bidding of those who may mistake our having such distinctions? They are not prevented from forming themselves into a separate society, having their own offices, their own terms of communion. We only say, that, if they do so separate them-have not a right to participation in its offices. To withhold this power, whenever its necessity shall be felt, would not be easily reconcilable with the first article of the Magna Charta of olden times, nor with the plainest obligation of the Magna Charta of more modern days, the Coronation Oath. But how can such a power be adequately exercised except by the church assembled in synod?

"In asking for such a power, we wish not, I repeat, 'to judge them that are without.' We only claim to pronounce that they are without—out of our church, of which we believe and proclaim that it is the visible church of Christ in this land. We quarrel not with others, though we think them heretics, or schismatics, and though, as such, we refuse to them communion with us in the offices of religion; but we quarrel not with them if they choose to say the same each of his own separate congregation.

"The court, in delivering the late judgment in Martin v. Escott, thought proper to 'point out the inconsistent and even absurd consequences which would follow from the opposite doctrine to its own.'

"Now I, too, may be permitted to point out the consequences, (due respect forbids my calling them inconsistent or absurd,) which would follow from some dicta of the court, if they should ever be exalted to the authority of judgments.

"For instance, if, as was said, (happily not ruled,) by the court, it be the duty of the minister to use the office of burial over 'every corpse which shall be brought to the church or churchyard,' it should seem to be equally the duty of those who bring it, to permit the office to be used. And yet it is quite conceivable that this may not always be very satisfactory. For, be it remembered, there are other persons not in communion with the church, besides that description of dissenters who promoted the late suit. Now, let me put a case, it shall be not an extreme case, but one actually proposed by the court itself, that of 'foreigners who have been baptized otherwise than by ministers of episcopal ordination.' The court pointed out as one of the 'inconsistent and even absurd consequences' of the defendant's plea, that 'such foreigners could not be buried with the rites of our church, should they depart this life within our territory.' It happens, that many such foreigners from one particular country, as well as many of our own countrymen who are in communion with them, die amongst us every year—I mean presbyterians of the Kirk of Scotland.

"Now, let us suppose the corpse of one of these presbyterians, Scotch, or Irish, or English, to be brought to the churchyard of any parish in England. 'If the minister delay burying in the manner and form prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer,' he will be suspended, should the court's dictum ever be ruled to be the law. If the minister plead his conscience, the plea will be either sneered at, or frowned down. Knowing this, he submits, and quietly begins the ceremony.

"Meanwhile, those who bring the corpse insist on 'immediately interring it without any ceremony;' for such is the order 'concerning burial of the dead' in the 'directory for public worship,' set forth by 'public authority in the church of Scotland.' They, too, will plead conscience; they will cry aloud against the abomination of 'a preconcerted form of prayer' being imposed upon them, in the exercise of their common-law right of depositing the remains of their deceased brother in the parish churchyard; and as they are not in the habit of submitting, we need not fear, but that some very good reason will soon be found why they shall be submitted to.

"Here I would leave the matter, were it not for one particular of the speech made in delivering the judgment of the court above, which has, I understand, given some uneasiness to the clergy, and excited some surprise in others.

"That speech has derived more than ordinary importance from its having been previously written, and, as is understood, having received the sanction of all the learned members of the court. In stating this I wish to be considered as stating it with the sincerest feeling of respect for the wisdom and justice which dictated so cautious a proceeding.

"But, then, this caution only gave the stronger effect to all the observations in the speech, however irrelevant some of them may have been; however transcending the authority even of the high tribunal from which they emanated.

"In the conclusion, the court thought it necessary to propose, that clergymen, if they shall ever feel their consciences violated by any requisition of the law, will have no right to complain; they may do as laymen have done; they may resign their offices, and 'give way to those who could honestly hold them by performing their appointed functions.'

"Now, in putting forth this declaration, the court seems to me, (I must not be afraid of avowing it,) to have a little overstepped the line of its own duty, to have a little misunderstood the nature of the matter it was speaking of.

"The cure of souls, even though it be endowed, is not a mere salaried office, where may be resigned at pleasure. It is a station of high and holy responsibility, from which we are not at liberty to withdraw ourselves, merely because the world's law shall be found at variance with our duty. Should such a state of things ever arise, (I do not contemplate it as in the lowest degree probable; nor should I think it decent to suppose it even possible, were not the supposition thus forced upon us from so high a place,) but should such a state of things ever arise, we will complain, (for, thank God! the clergy, like all other subjects in this free land, may complain,) of the state of the law, which would thus make obedience to it incompatible with obedience to that higher law, which we are commissioned and commanded by God to execute; and we will urge our complaint in the firm but temperate tone which becomes us, not doubting that we shall obtain from a just legislature due attention and redress. Should the result be otherwise, (I have no fear that it ever will, but should it be otherwise,) the state will deal with us as it may deem fit; but we, my reverend brethren, will not renounce, we will adhere to our posts, calmly, meekly, faithfully, resolutely, in the fear of God, and not of man."

The Bishop of Exeter, in permitting the editor to publish this extract from his charge, has furnished him with the following important fact, in confirmation of the view taken by his lordship of the judgment of the church of England on the insufficiency of baptism by heretics or schismatics to entitle the parties so baptised to church communion, and the privileges consequent thereupon.

It appears from Cardwell, (Synod 776,) that on the very first meeting of convocation, after the resolution of the bishops respecting the validity of baptism (with the proper matter and form), by whomsoever administered, so as to make re-baptisation unfit, the queen (doubtless on the application of the bishops), in her "Letter to the Convocation about Business for them," on the 17th March, 1714, specially included among "the matters proper for the consideration of the said convocation," these which follow:

"The preparing a form for admitting converts from the church of Rome, and such as shall renounce other errors.

"For restoring those who have relapsed."

It appears further (Ibid. 796-804), that such forms were prepared and adopted by convocation on June 18, and were prevented from becoming canons of the church only by the death of Queen Anne. But though they thus missed obtaining the binding force of law, they nevertheless express the judgment of the church in 1714. They stand, in short, on a stronger footing of authority than the "Form for consecrating Churches and Churchyards," which having been prepared by the upper house in 1715, was not brought to maturity, when the prorogation of the Synod in 1717 put an end to all its deliberations.

Now in the forms which were passed by convocation in 1714 (as stated above), for "admitting converts," it is expressed, that the congregation are "met together for the reconciling of a penitent (lately of the church of Rome, or lately of the separation) to the established church of England, as to a true and sacred part of Christ's holy catholic church."

It is plain, therefore, that until they should be so reconciled, such persons were not considered by our church as members of the holy catholic church, and, of consequence, as not entitled to the privileges of such members, one of which is, burial with the rites of the church.

In the course of the service, the penitent (if from the separation), having made profession of his "allowing and approving the orders of bishops, priests, and deacons," and if he have been "a teacher in some separate congregation," further allowing and approving those orders, "as what have been in the church of Christ from the time of the apostles," having also promised "conformity to the Liturgy of the church of England," &c. receives absolution, and is "received" by the bishop, or priest (appointed by the bishop), "into the holy communion of the church of England, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

And the penitent is likewise charged to be confirmed at the next opportunity.

The Bishop of Exeter has at the same time adduced the following attestation to the truth of a principle laid down in his lordship's charge, that the language of the offices in the Liturgy proceeds on the assumption, that they are applicable to members of the church, and to them only.

At the Savoy Conference in 1661, which was in effect the review of the Book of Common Prayer, just before it was established by the Act of Uniformity, the non-conformist ministers put forth this as one of their proposals:

"XV. That whereas throughout the several offices the phrase is such as presumes all persons (within the communion of the church) to be regenerated, converted, and in an actual state of grace, &c. We desire, that this may be reformed." Cardwell, Conf. 308.

The bishops, in their answer, admitted that such is the import of the words, saying, "The church in her prayers useth no more offensive phrase than St. Paul uses when he writes to the Corinthians, Galatians, and others, calling them in general the churches of God, sanctified in Christ Jesus, by vocation saints, &c.; and our prayers, and the phrase of them, surely, supposes no more, than that they are saints by calling, sanctified in Christ Jesus, by their baptism admitted into Christ's congregation, and so to be reckoned members of that society, till either they shall separate themselves by wilful schism, or be separated by legal excommunication." Ibid. 343.

Now this may be considered as the interpretation of the Liturgy by the very authority which last sanctioned and enjoined it.

Judgment of Sir Herbert Jenner Fust, in the Office of the Judge promoted by Nurse v. Henalowe.

Nurse v. Henalowe, (3 Eccles. Notes of Cases, 272,) was a similar proceeding to that of Beckett v. Martin, against the Rev. William Henry Henalowe, perpetual curate of the parish of Wormegay (or Wormgay), in the county of Norfolk, for refusing, on the 3rd of March, 1844, to bury the corpse of Sarah Bowden, a parishioner, who had been baptised by a minister of a congregation of primitive methodists. This case was brought by letters of request from the Bishop of Norwich under the Church Discipline Act. The reverend defendant, who conducted his case in person, at first gave a negative issue, denying the articles generally; but afterwards retracted the denial, and gave an affirmative issue, thereby admitting the facts pleaded in the articles.

Sir Herbert Jenner Fust: "In this case, the court, however it may lament the situation in which the reverend gentleman has placed himself, must pronounce its sentence in the terms of the canon—for it is a proceeding not under the general ecclesiastical law, but under the 68th Canon, which gives the court no discretion, as to diminishing or increasing the punishment. The canon directs that, if a clergyman shall refuse to bury a corpse brought to the churchyard, convenient notice having been given to him, he shall be suspended from his ministry for three months: and there is no reason, which I can collect from the case, to alter the opinion of the court, as to the necessity of inflicting this punishment upon Mr. Henslowe. I must state, that a long protest in arrest of judgment was delivered to me by the registrar, as from Mr. Henslowe; that I have read that protest, and I am sorry to say, that it goes into a history of which the court cannot take any notice, referring to persons not before the court, and imputing malevolent motives. It has nothing to do with the question. This is not a case of discretion, for the canon (which is the statute of the court) has itself affixed the punishment to the offence when proved. Now, it is proved, that the corpse of this child was brought to the churchyard, after sufficient notice, and that Mr. Henslowe was informed of the fact, and refused to bury it. Under these circumstances, the court is bound to pronounce the sentence; and although it laments that a case of this kind should be brought to its notice, and that a clergyman should place himself in such a situation, the court cannot relieve him; and it would be wise on the part of clergymen to recollect that, in every case of this kind, where an opposition to the claim of a legal right by a large body of persons in the country is made, and that opposition is unsuccessful, (as it almost always must be in these cases,) they afford an additional triumph to persons who are seeking the downfall of the established church;—an additional source of triumph is afforded on all such occasions, where an unsuccessful opposition is made to the claim of a legal right.

"Under the circumstances, I must pronounce that Mr. Henslowe has incurred the penalty affixed by the canon, the party promoting the office of the judge having established his case; and, consequently, unless Mr. Henslowe has anything to allege by way of defence, I must suspend him for three months, and condemn him in the costs. I can hear nothing as to the protest, which contains matter utterly irrelevant."

Mr. Henslowe: "I wish to explain myself. The end of the law is to elicit truth and to establish justice; but the truth has not been elicited, nor justice established, in my case." [Sir Herbert Jenner Fust: "You have admitted the facts."] "I did so because I was intimidated on account of the costs." [Sir Herbert Jenner Fust: "I cannot hear you on that point: the articles were admitted, and you gave an affirmative issue to them, thereby admitting the facts: that is sufficient. If you proceed in this manner, I will not hear you, and I will direct the registrar to record the judgment of the court."] "I complain of the proceedings." [Sir Herbert Jenner Fust: "It is too late to complain of the proceedings: you have admitted the facts."] "I admitted the facts, because I was sensible there was a pre-termination—"

Sir Herbert Jenner Fust: "I cannot hear this. Let the Rev. William Henry Henslowe be suspended from his ministry for the space of three months; and I further condemn him in the costs of the proceedings."

Judgment of Sir Herbert Jenner Fust, in Titchemarsh v. Chapman.

In the office of the judge promoted by Titchemarsh v. Chapman, (3 Curt. 840.) it was held, that a child baptized with water in the name of the Holy Trinity, by a person alleged to be in heresy or schism with the church of England, is not unbaptized within the meaning of the rubric for the burial service, in the Book of Common Prayer; Sir Herbert Jenner Fust observing: "The question before the court in the present case, respects the admissibility of an allegation, which is offered on behalf of the Rev. W. H. Chapman, the party cited in this cause, who is a cause of office, for refusing to bury the corpse of a child brought to the churchyard, of which he is the vicar, and of whose interment due notice is alleged to have been given.

"The question comes before this court by virtue of letters of request from the bishop of the diocese of Ely, within whose diocese the party cited holds preferment. The citation in the cause was returned on the fourth session of Easter term in the last year, and an appearance was given to that citation, but under protest; that protest was extended in acts of court, for the reasons therein set forth, and pressed in argument; the court was of opinion, that the protest could not be sustained, and accordingly overruled it; a prohibition was then applied for and refused, upon which an absolute appearance was given for the party cited; a libel setting forth the charge against the party cited, was brought in and admitted; a negative issue was given to the articles; witnesses were examined, and publication prayed; and the allegation is now offered by way of defence to the charge brought against this reverend gentleman.

"The substance of the defence is, that this child was unbaptized within the true meaning of that term, as used in the rubric for the burial service, it being alleged in the articles, and not denied, that the child was baptized by a minister of that class of protestant dissenters termed Independentists, according to the form used by them, that is, with water, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; and it is pleaded on behalf of the Rev. Mr. Chapman, that such baptism is schismatical and heretical, and such as not to entitle the corpse of this child to have the burial service read over it.

"I had hoped, that after the late case of Martin v. Escott, (2 Curt. 692,) after the sentence in this court, and the affirmance of that sentence in the superior court, the question was set at rest, and that no further resistance would have been offered to what was declared, both by this court and by the court above, to be the law on this question. This court is bound, upon proper application made, to enforce the law; this court has no discretion whether or not it will entertain a suit of this description, which is clearly within its jurisdiction, neither can it refuse to proceed to pronounce sentence when the suit is before it.

"It is now contended, that this question is not concluded by what took place in Mastin v. Escott; and it is said, that it was only decided in that case, that an infant, who had been baptised by a Wesleyan minister, in the name of the Trinity, was not unbaptised; and that the rubric which declares, that the burial service shall not be read over persons who die unbaptised, did not apply to such case. Certainly, in Mastin v. Escott, nothing did turn on the suggestion of heresy or schism; the defect in the baptism, as there alleged, was the want of holy orders in the person who had performed that ceremony. In the present case this question has been directly raised; it is distinctly averred, that this baptism was, and is, heretical, having been performed by a person not qualified to administer the rite of baptism. The court may here say, that in Mastin v. Escott, both in this court and in the superior court, the question was stated to be confined to this point, whether baptism could be duly administered by a Wesleyan minister; nothing turned on the question of heresy or schism; the case was so stated by the learned lord who delivered the judgment of the court above. The distinction does arise in the present case, and the question is directly raised, whether or no baptism of this description, pleaded to be heretical and schismatical, is invalid baptism, so as to take this case out of that decision in Mastin v. Escott. Now, although it is perfectly true there has been no absolute decision on the point, for it has not as yet been distinctly raised, and courts of law never determine more than the question raised before them; yet undoubtedly the greater part of the argument in Mastin v. Escott turned on the question, whether schismatical or heretical baptism was or was not valid; it was part of the object of the party there cited, to show that the baptism in that case was heretical and schismatical, and not simply lay baptism, and the arguments were founded principally on its being heretical and schismatical; and, although, as I have said, it was not necessary in that case to decide, whether schismatical and heretical baptism was valid, or invalid, the arguments were principally directed to that point. It is not, however, necessary to enter into the arguments which were so elaborately urged on the court in that case; I have stated that they principally turned on this point; reference was made to the different opinions entertained in the primitive church as to the validity of such baptism: the authority of Tertullian was cited in support of that baptism, and the opinions of St. Cyprian, Firmilian, and writers in the second and third centuries, in opposition to it. Again, reference was made to the council of Arles, to the opinion of St. Austin, and to the general opinion in favour of that proposition; also to the opinions of the Eastern and Western churches, and to the practice down to the time of the Reformation, and thence to the present time.

"The strength of the arguments certainly turned on the point, whether schismatical or heretical baptism was or was not valid. It does appear to me, therefore, that this present question is reduced to a narrow compass, and I say so at the present time, because I find, in the seventh article of this allegation, that the validity of lay baptism seems hardly to be brought in question. Now, the seventh article is to this effect: 'That by the practice and usage of the primitive church, and the laws, canons, and constitutions of the church of England, any persons, whether infants or adults, baptized in the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, by heretics, could not be admitted into the church, or allowed to partake of her privileges, until they had by themselves, or by their sponsors, sought for such admission, according to the form directed by the church, although it might not be essential to reiterate the sacrament of baptism.' This article does appear to me to admit the whole question of the validity of lay baptism; all that it says is this, that, by the canons and constitutions of the church of England, persons so baptized could not be admitted into the church, until by themselves or their sponsors they had sought for such admission, according to the form prescribed by the church. It therefore seems to me, that it would be utterly superfluous to enter into a discussion of the authorities, cited on the one side and on the other, for the sole purpose of determining, whether this baptism is valid or not, when it is not contended, that this baptism is invalid in itself. It is not said, that such baptism is null and void, so that the question is, whether baptism, so conferred, entitles the party recipient to have the burial service of the church read over his corpse, when it is duly brought to the churchyard for interment. The court, therefore, is relieved from the necessity of entering into that first discussion. Now, although this case has remained long undetermined, [that has arisen from inevitable circumstances, (the indisposition of the judge,) and not from any doubt which the court has entertained with respect to the law of this case; and it being not now questioned, that baptism, by heretics or laymen, is a valid baptism, and need not to be reiterated, (indeed, one of the authorities cited by the learned counsel who support this allegation, went to shew that such baptism need not be repeated;) and this surely was acknowledging it to be valid in itself; and if so, even although received at the hands of persons who disbelieve in the doctrine of the Trinity, the recipient cannot be said to die unbaptised.

"There cannot then be any doubt in the mind of the court, as to what must be the fate of this case, when, as I have shewn, the baptism itself is admitted to be valid; and the only doubt I feel, is, whether this allegation ought not to be admitted for the purpose of allowing the question to go up to the Privy Council, in order to be discussed before the highest tribunal. This court would be very much inclined to pursue the course which it adopted in the case of Martin v. Escott, namely, to admit the allegation, for the purpose of enabling the parties, if so inclined, to take the opinion of the superior court. But if the parties wish to take a higher opinion upon the admissibility of this allegation, they can apply for leave to appeal from its rejection; for, that it must be rejected, is the opinion to which the court has arrived. The court would be unwilling to exercise the discretion reposed in it by the act of the 3 & 4 Vict. (c. 86, s. 13), by refusing leave to appeal, because I apprehend, if the court were to reject this allegation, and refuse leave to appeal, the rejection would be final.

"In a case, which is supposed to involve a most important question between protestant dissenters and members of the established church, the court would be unwilling to exercise that discretion by refusing leave to appeal.

"I will now state the grounds upon which I have come to the determination to reject this allegation. The whole question seems to me to have been determined, in Martin v. Escott, in favour of the validity of this baptism; because, if baptism conferred by a heretic is so far a valid baptism, that it need not be repeated, then the whole case seems to come to this, that being a valid baptism, the child cannot be said to have died unbaptized. It is clear, that a child baptized by a layman is not unbaptized within the meaning of the rubric for the burial service, and if so, I cannot understand what is the distinction between the two cases. If once it be admitted, that this baptism is so far valid that it need not be repeated, I confess I cannot see the reason why, in the one case, the child is to receive the offices of the church, and to have the burial service read over it, and in the other case, should not be so entitled. Neither child can be said to die unbaptized, and it is only where the person is unbaptized, that the service for the dead is not to be read over the body. Both lay and heretical baptism are contrary to the orders of the church, but both are valid, and if valid, entitle the recipients, in either case, to the privileges conferred by valid baptism, whatever those privileges may be. In both cases the child would seem to be, in the words of the rubric, sufficiently baptized,—and I use the word 'sufficiently' advisedly, and in the sense in which it is used in the rubric. It was not a word for the first time introduced in the former case by this court; the word will be found in the first rubric, (Edward 6, A.D. 1549,) and the word has been continued and used in the rubric for the present form of baptism. In both instances, it is declared, that a child so baptized, (in the case of a layman, it has been already decided, and, as I consider, by a heretic also,) is sufficiently baptized, according to the use made of that word in the rubric, to which meaning the act is confined in this case.

"To what extent such baptism goes is not for this court to determine; whether it does or does not confer spiritual grace, the court does not offer any opinion upon; all which the court declares, is, that the child was not unbaptized, need not be baptized again, and, if not unbaptized, that the minister was not justified in refusing to read the burial service over it. It has been contended, that there are other means besides baptism by which this child must be qualified to be admitted into the body of the church, and admitted to partake of the privileges of the church. What these other means are, I have not yet heard; I suppose the imposition of hands by the bishop at confirmation. I inquired during the argument, and I could not find that there were any means by which this child could be admitted into the church of England except by confirmation by the bishop after it had arrived at years of discretion; and I now assume, that this is the ceremony which is requisite to entitle it to that right. How, then, does this baptism differ from the most solemn and formal mode of baptism? No child can be admitted to partake of the holy communion until it has been confirmed; so child can be presented to the bishop to be confirmed until he or she has arrived at years of discretion, and is able to say the creed, the ten commandments, and answer the questions of the catechism of the church; it is not said a child can do this that the bishop is to confirm it. No recipient of the most regular baptism is admitted to partake of the holy communion until confirmed, or desirous of being confirmed. Then, this baptism being so far valid that it need not be repeated, the very child, if it had arrived at years of discretion, would have been entitled to come to partake of that rite, qualified by conforming to the orders of the church. It is also quite clear, that no person is entitled to have the order of confirmation administered to him, unless previously baptized; the mere imposition of hands will avail nothing without previous baptism. There is nothing to be confirmed, unless there has been a valid preceding baptism. It seems to me, therefore, that the case of this child is precisely the same, so far as the rites of the church are concerned, as in the case of the most solemn form of baptism, because, it is quite clear, that a party is admitted into the church by baptism, and not by imposition of hands. There may be deficiencies in that baptism which may be afterwards supplied, but these deficiencies do not arise from the inward effect of that baptism, either in the case of the most regular or irregular baptism.

"Therefore, it does appear to me, upon these grounds, unless there be something in the allegation which can be said to constitute a valid defence for refusing to bury this child. I mean refusing the offices of the church, and the benefits conferred by the offices of the church, whatever they be, that this question has been determined by what took place in Martin v. Escott, and by the admission of the principle, that this is so far a valid baptism, that it need not be repeated. It is quite impossible, that this child, by an act of commission or omission, can have forfeited the right to those offices, for the child had shortly after its birth; at least, as far as the child is concerned, it could not be by any fault of its own, that it did not obtain the ulterior rite of imposition of hands, for that can only be obtained by an adult having knowledge of the creed, the ten commandments, and the church catechism. The question, as it appears to me, is not whether this child was admitted into the church of England, but whether it was admitted into the church of Christ? 'God forbid,' said Dr. Phillimore, in arguing this case, 'that I should say, this child was not a Christian,' having received the rite of baptism.

"Unless, therefore, there be something in the articles of this allegation which can in form or substance constitute a defence to this charge, or prevent the party being condemned in costs, the court will reject the allegation."

"... The court has now gone through the different articles of this allegation; and is of opinion, that no advantage could accrue to the party cited by admitting them, or any part of them; they do not appear to the court to constitute any defence to, or any extenuation of, the offence charged to have been committed by this gentleman against the law which makes it imperative on him to perform the burial service over a parishioner who dies not unbaptised."

"It has been held that a person, not a member of the church, may administer valid baptism, and if the baptism be valid, this child was not unbaptised. This child had no opportunity of supplying any defect in that baptism; for, by its death before arriving at years of discretion, it could not have desired or received the benefit to be derived by imposition of hands. No crime can be imputed to this child, as not having sought to supply this deficiency; and the fair presumption is, that had it arrived at years of discretion, any deficiency would have been supplied."

"I am of opinion that, even if I admitted this allegation, I should not in any manner benefit the party proceeded against; indeed, I think I am doing good to the party by arriving at the conclusion to reject it. I am saving him from great expense and interminable delay. I therefore reject this allegation, but, as it is stated, that no case has occurred precisely of this description, if the party shall be advised to apply for leave to appeal, I shall not refuse leave."

"The case will stand over until next court day, to ascertain whether the party shall wish, or shall be advised to appeal."

[The rejection of the allegation was not appealed from.]

VI. QUARRELLING, CHIDING, AND BRAWLING.

Judgment of Sir Herbert Jenner Pust, in the office of the Judge promoted by Burder v. Langley.

The office of the judge promoted by Burder v. Langley, (1 Eccles. Notes of Cases, 541,) was a proceeding by letters of request from the Bishop of Oxford, under Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, at the voluntary promotion of Mr. John Burder against the Rev. William Hawkes Langley, M.A., perpetual curate of Wheatley, in the county and diocese of Oxford, for quarrelling, chiding, and brawling by words, in the parish church of Wheatley. The articles pleaded as follows:—

1. The Stat. 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 4, and the laws, statutes, canons, and constitutions of the church. 2 & 3. That the defendant was a clerk in holy orders of the church of England. 4. That on Sunday, the 9th May, 1841, whilst he was in the performance of divine offices in the church of the perpetual curacy, shortly before the conclusion of the litany, after the response immediately following the prayer beginning, "O God, merciful Father," he made a short pause, and instead of proceeding with the service, being wholly regardless of the sacredness of the place and of his own duty in the performance of the divine office, he, in a chiding, quarrelsome, and brawling manner, addressing the congregation then and there present, said, "You were, perhaps, surprised at the pause I made at the end of the prayer, but it reminded me of my enemies. I have this morning received a letter from the archdeacon, offering some clergyman to do my duty for me; some one in the congregation has had the audacity to write to the archdeacon on the subject. Who has had the audacity to do this? Is it a Puseyite, who wants to introduce popery into the parish? I will, however, take care they never shall, as I will do my duty myself. I have preached the gospel, and delivered my own soul, whether the people will hear, or whether they will forbear. Some one has committed perjury against me in an affidavit made before Mr. Ashurst; but he waited till the witnesses were dead, so that he could not be punished for his perjury. Another of my enemies has written a letter to the bishop, full of falsehoods, to take my poor old uncle's living away; one of them has been to a dear old friend of mine, the only dear friend I have at Oxford, driving falsehoods into his ears, in order to set him against me. I have been charged with adultery; but the fact is, that, one night, as I was coming from my tenant's at Lobb Farm, I saw a drunken man ill-treating his wife, and I interfered for her protection; for my being a clergyman did not prevent my acting with humanity towards a female under such circumstances. The man told me I might be damned: what was it to me? what had I to do with it? He then struck me; but the Lord gave me power, and I knocked the man down," at the same time using the action of striking with his fist, in illustration of the manner in which he struck the said man; that he then proceeded to say, "If any man can prove me an adulterer, I will have my head cut off and forfeit it, and I have before mentioned this circumstance to the bishop;" adding, "I pray for my enemies, and forgive them, and hope they will repent." That during the delivery of this address, he was in a very excited and impassioned state, and frequently struck the reading-desk and the books thereon, in a very violent manner, with his clenched fist, and by such improper and incorrect conduct, gave great offence to the congregation then assembled in the church, and reflected even-dal and disgrace on his sacred profession. 5. That the defendant proceeded with the service until after the response immediately succeeding the ninth commandment, when, instead of proceeding with the tenth, he, in a chiding, quarrelsome, and brawling manner, addressed the congregation, and after advertising to that part of his former address relating to the persons therein stated to have given information to the archdeacon, proceeded to say, "One of my enemies in the parish has had four bastards, all the children of one man by one woman; the bastards are dead, the woman is dead; all dead, dead; gone, gone out of the way." That he then adverted to her majesty's ministers, and the proposed alterations in the corn laws, and declared that the ministers deserved praise for enabling every one to worship God according to their own conscience, and for wishing to give to every man a cheap loaf; that all who had votes would soon be called upon to give them, and urged them to give them in favour of the then ministers, and added, "God bless the present government; I have been attacked on account of being engaged in their service; I forgive my enemies, and hope they will repent:" that by such his irreverent and improper conduct, he gave great offence to the congregation, and reflected scandal and disgrace upon his sacred profession. 6. That for such offence the defendant ought to be canonically and duly corrected and punished. 7. Pleaded the act 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86.

These articles were admitted, though opposed by the defendant in person.

Sir Herbert Jenner Prest observed: "Mr. Langley has attempted to justify himself on the ground that what he did was 'asking the prayers of the congregation.' That he did ask the prayers of the congregation, some of the witnesses admit. But how? At the conclusion of an excited and improper address, unsuited to the place or the occasion. Instead of expressing contrition, he seems to glory in the act, and contends that he has a right to repeat it. But he should consider, if he has no regard for his own character, the character of the place, and not make an individual the subject of remark, in the face of the parish, where he could not justify himself without being guilty of an offence. As Lord Stowell has said, 'The church is not the place where private quarrels are to be carried on, and it is no justification that there was misconduct on the other side, which might give the first provocation—the church not being a place where human infirmity can be pleaded to justify violent and indecent conduct, however produced.' And when Mr. Langley urges that, in Cor v. Goodday, (2 Consist. 138,) Lord Stowell said that a case might arise which would justify the officiating minister in addressing a congregation, 'as far as was necessary to remove an obstruction to the public service,' this is not such a case, namely, where, during the performance of divine service, something calls for immediate interference, to prevent indecent conduct in the church. Mr. Langley is, therefore, without any excuse of sudden provocation, and the asking for the prayers of the congregation, after the address had been brought to a conclusion, was a mere pretence.

"Then it is objected, that these proceedings have been instituted by the secretary of the bishop. I suppose they have been instituted by the bishop's directions, and it is better, that the bishop should not be himself the promoter of the judge's office; indeed, I am not aware that, under the act, the bishop could be the promoter. The bishop is loaded with obloquy by Mr. Langley on account of his taking part in these proceedings. I can only say that, if the bishop had passed over Mr. Langley's conduct, he would not have properly discharged the duties of his high office. It is his duty to prevent any irreverent conduct by a minister during the performance of divine service, and more particularly by one who is under his immediate notice. I cannot but look at Mr. Langley's defence as a very great aggravation of the grave and serious offence of which he is guilty, and I cannot help observing, that the extraordinary course he has adopted, of bringing forward accusations against others, is not only a great aggravation of his offence, but a melancholy exhibition of himself, notwithstanding the caution which the court gave him, in a spirit of kindness.

"I am clearly of opinion, on a full consideration of the evidence, that the charge is abundantly proved, and the offence clearly and indisputably substantiated against Mr. Langley. There is only one other consideration—that is, what punishment is called for by the law for what has been properly described by the learned counsel as one of the worst cases of chiding and bawling which have ever come to the notice of the court.

"The proceedings have been instituted under the 5 & 6 Edw. 6, and not under the general ecclesiastical law, and the punishment which the court is prayed to inflict is that of suspension. What was the punishment assigned to the offence in former times by the general ecclesiastical law, it is not very easy to ascertain. In Hutchins v. Deserille, (1 Consist. 181,) Lord Stowell says that, by the ancient ecclesiastical law, for such an offence, the benefice of an offending minister might be sequestrated—whether for one offence, or for a repetition of the offence, is not stated; I cannot find that there was a sequestration of the living for one offence. I am therefore called to assign a punishment under the statute, whereby the punishment in such a case of a clerk in holy orders is suspension from the administration of his office 'for so long a time as the ordinary shall think fit, according to the fault.' The amount of punishment is thus left to the discretion of the court, and I am of opinion that, in this case, the court is bound to pronounce a sentence that shall carry with it the effect of showing its sense of the seriousness and gravity of the offence, and the court is of opinion that it will not exact a due measure of justice if it pronounce that Mr. Langley has committed an offence which calls for the punishment of suspension from his office for a period of eight calendar months from the time when such suspension

"The court has been pressed not to allow the suspension to be removed till Mr. Langley shall produce a certificate of good behaviour during the period of suspension. But I have not been able to find any precedent for requiring a certificate of good behaviour in a proceeding of this description. In a proceeding for drunkenness, where the party, a minister in holy orders, with a benefice, has been suspended, a certificate has been required, (Burder v. Speer, 1 Eccles. Notes of Cases, 63,) as a proof of the conduct of the party: but Dicks v. Haddeford, (1 Add. 298,) was the first instance of a certificate being required even in such a case, and I consider that it would be extremely difficult to draw up a certificate with reference to the offence of chiding and brawling, embodying within itself the requisite qualifications to enable Mr. Langley to show in what manner he had conducted himself in this particular. I can understand that, in cases of immorality and habitual drunkenness, a certificate may be proper, to show that the party has abstained from such conduct; but in a case of chiding and brawling, I do not see how a certificate could be framed so as to show that the party had not committed the same offence. And, independently of this, the punishment in this case is prescribed by the statute, and I do not know that the court is at liberty to add to it by requiring a certificate of good behaviour during the time of suspension. I should have great doubt and difficulty in saying that the court has the power to require such a certificate, and as there is no precedent for it, I confine the sentence to what the law prescribes, and I direct the suspension to be signified on Sunday next, the 3rd of July. I further am bound to condemn Mr. Langley in the costs occasioned by these proceedings, and I am afraid they will fall heavily upon him; but the court has no means of relieving him from them. I endeavoured, as far as I could, to acquaint Mr. Langley with the nature of the offence charged against him, and to convince him of the propriety, if he was guilty, (as it has turned out he was,) of admitting the charge, and not rendering it necessary that the articles should go to proof; but Mr. Langley saw fit to take another course, and has brought this expense upon himself by the manner in which he has (I will not say defended himself, but) conducted his own cause, whereby the promoter must have incurred considerable expense. If Mr. Langley, after the intimation from the court, had, on the admission of the articles, given an affirmative issue, the expense would have been slight, and the suspension much less than must now be imposed for the sake of example, for the conduct pursued by Mr. Langley has induced the court to make the suspension continue for a longer period.

"I pronounce that Mr. Langley has incurred suspension for eight calendar months from the day (including the day) when the sentence is notified; I monish him to abstain from such conduct in future, and I condemn him in the costs."

VII. DRUNKENNESS, INDECENT CONDUCT, DEMEANOUR, AND LANGUAGE. STAT. 3 & 4 VICT. c. 86.

Judgment of Sir Herbert Jenner, in the office of the Judge promoted by Burder v. Speer,

The case of the office of the judge promoted by Burder v. Speer, (1 Eccles. Notes of Cases, 39,) was a cause of office promoted by Mr. John Burder, secretary to the Bishop of Winchester, against the Reverend Wilfred Speer, perpetual curate of Thames Ditton, Surrey, "for being an habitual drunkard, and for having been repeatedly guilty of the crime of drunkenness, and also for having been frequently guilty of indecent conduct, demeanour, and language, in the church of the perpetual curacy, as well in and during the performance of divine offices and services in the church as before and after the performance of such divine services and offices. The suit was brought by letters of request from the commissary of the Bishop of Winchester.

This case involved no subtle principles of law, but was merely a question of evidence, viz., whether the defendant was guilty of drunkenness or not.

Sir Herbert Jenner, inter alia, observed, "Upon the whole of the case, I am clearly of opinion that the evidence is sufficient to establish the charges made against Mr. Speer; that if he is not proved to have been, in the strict sense of the term, an habitual drunkard, he is proved to have been frequently guilty of the crime of drunkenness, and it is not necessary that every article should be proved to its full extent; it is quite sufficient if the ecclesiastical offence is made out distinctly by the evidence taken upon the articles. I am also clearly of opinion, that Mr. Speer is fully proved to have been rendered incapable, from the effect of liquor, of performing the duty of the parish church in a proper and seemly manner, and further, that he has gone the length of performing it in an indecent and irreverent manner, and that the natural consequence has been, the withdrawal of several of the parishioners from attendance at their parish church; and I think if some steps had not been taken to check his proceedings, they must have led to its entire desertion. It is, therefore, due to the attendants at the church, that the court should pronounce a sentence that shall have the effect of preventing the recurrence of these improper proceedings and exhibitions, and give this gentleman an opportunity to amend his conduct.

"Before I proceed to pronounce that sentence, I will notice certain interrogatories (upon which the court has been called upon to pronounce its opinion) administered to some of the witnesses examined upon the articles. The object with which I refer to these interrogatories is to point out the impropriety of imputing to witnesses of highly respectable character the charges to which I have adverted, namely, of acting from malice and private revenge, and of entering into a conspiracy against this gentleman, and attempting to support such proceeding by evidence which is false; in fact, of having brought forward these unfounded accusations to as-

VICT. c. 86.

perse his character. Now, I repeat, that a more improbable case of conspiracy can hardly be imagined. I am not prepared to say, that it is not open to a party, if he choose, to impute malice, and resentment, and spite, to individuals by whom he suggests that he is persecuted. I have great difficulty in saying that the court ought to prescribe any rule by which counsel should be governed in settling interrogatories, upon such suggestions from their clients, fortified by their strong assertions of innocence. I feel great difficulty in saying what is the course which should be pursued, as the court cannot know what the individual circumstances of the case may be, and it must, I am afraid, be left, in each case, to the discretion of counsel—that discretion which they are bound to exercise for the advantage of their client, as well as with respect to the general interests of society. I must leave it to the good taste and discretion of counsel in what cases they will be justified in imputing to witnesses improper motives towards individuals. This court has not the means of stopping counsel in administering interrogatories, as in a court of law, where questions are put vis à voce, and where probable proof of a conspiracy if it exist, may be obtained at the moment. I can only say, that I disapprove of the nature of the interrogatories in this case, because I see that they are without a shadow of foundation in fact. What can I say, but that counsel should not lend themselves to attacks upon witnesses, by means of interrogatories which impute improper motives to them, of which there is no proof? I can only express my disapprobation of such interrogatories when they are brought to my notice, and from the facts before me, I have seen in this case, with great regret, that, from assurances given to counsel of innocence of the charges imputed to their client—for they must have been grounded upon those unfounded assurances, and upon statements that there were grounds for imputing the charges to spite and malice—the counsel have been induced to sign these interrogatories. I cannot lay down any rule; I can only express my hope that counsel will govern themselves by what they consider right, for I can assure counsel on both sides, that they can produce no other effect upon my mind than a prejudice against the person by whom these interrogatories are administered, provided they do not show that the persons to whom they are addressed have been actuated by improper motives. Whenever a case is made to depend upon charges of conspiracy, perjury, and subornation of perjury, against a number of individuals, whether in high or low life, it always creates a suspicion in the mind of the court, that that case has no substance or foundation. I can say no more upon this subject, than to express a hope that counsel will abstain, as far as they possibly can, from putting interrogatories which in substance or language they may consider as conveying imputations upon individuals, in whatever situation those individuals may be.

“With respect to the sentence, I have endeavoured to find, if possible, any circumstances which might justify the court in passing one less severe than that which it has been accustomed to pass in cases of this description. I have considered whether there is anything from which the court can suppose that this gentleman has shown any symptoms of contrition; but, unfortunately, I am bound to say that the circumstances show no ground of mitigation. From beginning to end, he has denied the charges; and it is suggested that they are founded in malice, and therefore there is nothing of which he has to repent; as no fault has been committed by him, there is nothing for which he is to express contrition. I am bound, therefore, to pronounce that sentence which the court has been in the habit of doing in cases of this kind,—such a sentence as will give the party opportunity of amendment,—namely, suspension for three years. The party will therefore be suspended officially and beneficially for three years, and, as is the usual course, until he produce a certificate, from three beneficed clergymen, that he has been of good conduct during that time; and, as a necessary consequence, I am under the necessity of condemning him to the costs incurred in these proceedings.”

Precedent of a Judgment for Drunkenness and Lewdness.

“In the name of God, Amen. We, John, by divine permission Bishop of Lincoln, having pursuant to the provisions of an act of parliament passed in the third and fourth years of the reign of her present majesty Queen Victoria, intituled, ‘An Act for better enforcing Church Discipline,’ of our own mere motion appointed certain commissioners for the purpose of making inquiry as to the grounds of certain scandal and evil report existing concerning the Reverend A.A. within our diocese and jurisdiction, for having offended against the law ecclesiastical, by having committed the crime of drunkenness and lewdness, for that he, on the day of last, at was in a state of intoxication, and in the company of a common prostitute; and also that on the day of at he was found in a state of intoxication; and also that on the day of at he was in a brothel house there; and also that on the day of in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and he was intoxicated while performing divine service in the parish church of aforesaid: and we having received the report of of the said commissioners, that after full inquiry made according to the directions of the statute, they are unanimously of opinion that there are sufficient prima facie grounds for instituting further proceedings against the said and having received the consent in writing of the and to our pronouncing, without any further proceeding, such sentence in the case as we shall think fit, and having ourselves carefully examined and compared the depositions of the witnesses taken before us said commissioners, we do hereby pronounce, declare, and adjudge, that the charges brought against the said of drunkenness and lowliness are proved, and that he be suspended for the space of from performing any services of the church within our diocese, and from all profits of the said benefice of and from taking and receiving the fruits, tithes, rents, and other ecclesiastical dues and emoluments whatsoever belonging thereto (such suspension to commence from the publication of these presents), and we accordingly do suspend the said and do condemn him in the costs of these proceedings; and do further pronounce and do decree, that at the expiration of the said the said shall exhibit to and leave with us a certificate under the hands of three clergymen, of his good behaviour and morals during the time of his said suspension, and the said certificate be approved of by us before such suspension be relaxed: and we do also decree a sequestration of all and singular the profits, tithes, rents, and other ecclesiastical dues and emoluments whatsoever of the said benefice, to issue in the accustomed form, under seal of our episcopal court; and we do direct and enjoin the churchwardens of the parish of aforesaid, jointly and severally, to publish these presents by affixing or causing to be affixed a true copy thereof (the said original sentence being first shown to them or some of them) upon the principal door of the parish church of aforesaid, and that the said copies of the said sentence remain so affixed upon three several Sundays next following the date of these presents, and be then deposited in the parish chest, or chests belonging to the said benefice or parish: and we do further direct, that these presents shall be exhibited to the said and that a true copy of the same be left with him, and that the said original, with all other proceedings relating thereto, be deposited in the registry of our episcopal court aforesaid. Given under our hand and episcopal seal the day of in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and in the year of our translation."

VIII. DEPRAVING OF THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER.

Judgment of Sir Herbert Jenner Just in Sanders v. Head.

The office of the judge promoted by Sanders v. Head, (3 Curt. 570,) was a proceeding by articles against the Reverend Henry Erskine Head, a clerk in holy orders of the united church of England and Ireland, rector of the rectory and parish church of Feniton, in the county of Devon, in the diocese of Exeter, and in the province of Canterbury. This proceeding was commenced in the court of Arches, in virtue of letters of request from the Bishop of Exeter, which had been presented under Stat. 3 & 4 Viet. c. 86. On these letters being presented and accepted, a decree issued from the Arches court on the 14th of November, 1841, calling on Mr. Head to answer to certain articles, heads, positions, or interrogatories to be administered to him touching and concerning his soul's health, and the lawful correction and reformation of his manners and excesses; and more especially for having offended against the laws, statutes, constitutions, and canons ecclesiastical of the realm, by having written and published, or caused to be published, in a certain newspaper called "The Western Times," a letter, entitled "A View of the Duplicity of the present System of Episcopal Ministration, in a Letter addressed to the Parishioners of Feniton, Devon, occasioned by the Bishop of Exeter's Circular on Confirmation, by Henry Erskine Head, A.M. Rector of Feniton, Devon;" in which letter it was openly affirmed and maintained, that the Catechism and the Order of Confirmation, in the Book of Common Prayer, contained erroneous and strange doctrine; and wherein was also openly affirmed and maintained other positions in derogation and depraving of the said Book of Common Prayer, contrary to the said laws, statutes, constitutions, and canons ecclesiastical of the realm, and against the peace and unity of the church.

The letter upon which the foregoing articles were founded contained, among others, the following passages:

"The only plea which can shield our prelates from the charge of intentional duplicity, is, that they really are not aware of the unscripturalness and mischievousness of those dogmas, with which they incumber themselves and us. Ignorance of Scripture is that, which is to be attributed to their lordships on a principle of mere charity. Hence their unreadiness to do that which they promise to be ready to do; hence their unwillingness to reform, or, (at least so far as their own ministrations are concerned,) to rectify or avoid the serious error which the confirmation service contains. Hence their reckless, ruthless, and inconsistent recommendations, to the public and to the clergy, of doctrine which is erroneous, strange, and contrary to God's word. The episcopal circular, which I have now received, is a clear specimen of a system of duplicity by which their lordships, the bishops, have long been deceived, and are now perhaps more extensively than ever deceiving the public."

"As reformation in this respect is not hopeless, and as I also am pledged, by my ordination vows, as a minister of the church of England, to banish and drive away all erroneous doctrine, I do hereby decline and refuse to give any countenance whatever to the office of confirmation, as it is now used by their lordships, the bishops; and, instead of recommending, in compliance with the episcopal circular, the perusal and re-perusal of that service to the young persons of this parish, I warn them all, young, old, and middle aged, to beware, in the name of God, of the erroneous and strange doctrine which it contains."

"It will be said, that for this, I deserve to be turned out of the church; are all clergymen then to be turned out of the ministry who dissent from certain points in the Prayer Book? In this case, every body will be turned out of the ministry, and then nobody will remain in the ministry; shew me the works of any churchman within the last four centuries, and I will undertake to convict him of inconsistency with the Prayer Book. It is a fact, that there is no bishop or clergyman in England, in Ireland, or in the colonies, who does not sin against the Prayer Book in one point or another. It is also a fact that the Prayer Book sins against itself; some parts of it are at variance with other parts; the fourth, sixth, eighth, and thirty-sixth canons are repugnant to the first and third ordination vows. Some of the dogmas in the Catechism, Confirmation and Baptismal Services, are utterly inconsistent with the doctrines contained in the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, and seventeenth Articles."

Sir Herbert Jenner Post, in giving judgment, stated, "... It is no part of the province of this court to determine, whether the Book of Common Prayer does contain erroneous doctrine; it is sufficient for this court that it is the book which is to be used by the clergy as prescribed by the law of the land: the question is, are the words used in Mr. Head's letter derogatory and in deprivation of that book?" ... Caudrey's case, (5 Co. 1.) "is a direct and positive recognition of the power of the ecclesiastical court to punish, by ecclesiastical censures, or by deprivation, any person offending against the unity of the church. There is, as has been shown, in the act of Elizabeth, a direct recognition or preservation of the power of the ecclesiastical court; and, by the subsequent act of the 13th & 14th Car. 2, there is also a regular recognition of the power and authority of the ecclesiastical court, for the preservation of the peace, and unity of the church."

"Can the court, then, for one moment, doubt that Mr. Head is within the jurisdiction of this court, and amenable to his diocesan for disobedience to his ordination vow, as also, that he is punishable for such disobedience by ecclesiastical censures; can the power of the court to suspend Mr. Head be doubted? I have no doubt whatever, either as to the jurisdiction of this court, or that Mr. Head has brought himself within the jurisdiction: indeed, I feel no doubt that Mr. Head is clearly within the provisions of the statute of Elizabeth; but, under the general ecclesiastical law, Mr. Head is punishable for publishing this letter, of which he openly avows himself the author."

"I therefore have no hesitation in pronouncing the articles proved; the remaining question is, what is the punishment the court shall pronounce against Mr. Head, a minister in holy orders, and a beneficed clergyman? Now, I have referred to one part of the statute of Charles 2 (sect. 6), by which Mr. Head, when he took possession of his living, must, within two months, have read the morning and evening prayers, appointed to be read by, and according to, the said Book of Common Prayer, and openly and publicly declared his unfeigned assent and consent to the use of all things therein contained; or, ipso facto, have been deprived of his said ecclesiastical benefice and promotion: I have also referred to the 36th Canon, relating to the subscription to be made by such as are to be made ministers. This is absolutely necessary to be done by every candidate for holy orders, to subscribe before he can be admitted into the ministry, or obtain possession of a living."

"I therefore think Mr. Head has incurred the extreme sentence of this court, and that the court would be justified in pronouncing against him a sentence of deprivation. If Mr. Head could not have obtained possession of his living, without assenting or consenting to the use of all things contained in the Book of Common Prayer, he cannot complain if, by the sentence of this court, he is placed in precisely the same situation as if he had not, within two months, conformed to the provisions of the statute, and if he had not done so, he would, ipso facto, have been deprived; it would not, therefore, as I have before said, be a very harsh exercise of the power of the court to impose the penalty on Mr. Head, to which he was liable, if he had not made the declaration of conformity, according to the statute. The court, however, is not disposed to go to the full extent of its power; not from anything that exists in extenuation of Mr. Head's offence, for nothing can be more offensive than the way in which he has expressed himself in his letter; but the statute of Elizabeth makes a difference between a first and second offence; by it, 'any person preaching, declaring, or speaking against the prescribed rites and solemnities, is liable, for the first offence, to forfeit for one year the profits of all his ecclesiastical benefices, and also to be imprisoned for six months; for a second offence, he is to lose or be deprived ipso facto of all spiritual promotions, and to be imprisoned during life.' It seems, therefore, that, although it was considered, at the time the statute was passed, that the offence would not bear much extenuation, still that it was right and proper that the statute should make a distinction between persons guilty of one offence, and guilty of the like offence a second time. I think, therefore, that the justice of the case may be satisfied by suspending Mr. Head from his living, and from the emoluments of it, for three years. It will be borne in mind, that Mr. Head may be proceeded against for a second offence; he shall, during the term of his suspension, publish the like doctrines."

"I am, therefore, of opinion to pronounce the articles given in to be fully proved, and to decree that Mr. Head, for the offence he has committed, be suspended from his living and ministrations, for the term of three years; and that he be condemned in the costs of the suit; with an admonition to him to abstain from such conduct in future."

"I think the court would have been justified in going to the fullest extent of punishment, looking to the language in which Mr. Head has expressed his opinions in his letter."

IX. OBSERVANCE OR NON-OBSERVANCE OF CHURCH OFFICES.

In consequence of the conflicting opinions which exist respecting the observance or non-observance of church offices, enjoined by the rubric, it has been deemed expedient to publish extracts from a charge by the Bishop of London to the clergy of the diocese of London, at the visitation in October, 1842; the judgment of the Bishop of Exeter in re Walter Blunt (Clerk); a letter from the Bishop of Exeter to a portion of the inhabitants of Falmouth, in reply to a memorial addressed by them to his lordship; a pastoral letter from the Bishop of Exeter to the clergy of the diocese of Exeter; the charge of the Bishop of Worcester, delivered to the candidates for ordination at their final examination, December 21, 1844; a letter from the Bishop of Exeter to the Editor, commenting on the charge of the Bishop of Worcester; and extracts from a charge by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, to the clergy of his diocese, at his lordship's visitation, in August and September, 1844: which will tend to illustrate the principal points of controversy.

Extracts from a Charge by the Bishop of London to the Clergy of the Diocese of London, at the Visitation, in October, 1842.

"I now proceed to offer some observations upon the duty of complying with the church's directions in the celebration of divine services. Our proper rules in this respect are the rubric and canons, as the articles are, with regard to doctrine; and we are bound to observe the rule in the one case, as in the other, although it must be acknowledged, that a departure from the truth is more injurious in its consequences, than a deviation from the prescribed ritual. Now it is impossible to deny, that a great degree of laxity has crept over us in this matter; and we are much indebted to these learned and pious men, who have forcibly recalled our attention to a branch of duty, too long imperfectly performed. In some instances, indeed, they have gone beyond the line of duty and of prudence, in recommending, or practising, ceremonies and forms, not authorized by their own church; and in ascribing to others an importance which does not properly belong to them; but there can be no doubt of their having mainly contributed to the progress, which has been made during the last few years, towards a full and exact observance of the church's rubrical injunctions, as well as to a better understanding of the foundations and proportions of her polity, and the nature and value of her discipline. We ought not to overlook the real good, which they have effected in one direction, while we contemplate with apprehension the evil, which it is to be feared they have wrought in another.

"Every clergyman is bound, by the plainest obligations of duty, to obey the directions of the rubric. For conforming to them, in every particular, he needs no other authority than that of the rubric itself. We ought not to be deterred from a scrupulous observance of the rites and customs, prescribed or sanctioned by our church, by a dread of being thought too careful about the externals of religion. If we are not to go beyond her ritual, at least we ought not to fall short of it; nor to make her public services less frequent, nor more naked and inexpressive, than she intends them to be. In saying this, I am not holding any new language. In my charge to the clergy of the diocese of Chester, in 1825, I used these words: 'A strict and punctual conformity with the Liturgy and Articles of our church is a duty, to which we have bound ourselves by a solemn promise, and which, while we continue in its ministry, we must scrupulously fulfil. Conformity to the Liturgy implies, of course, an exact observance of the rubric. We are no more at liberty to vary the mode of performing any part of public worship, than we are, to preach doctrines at variance with the Articles of religion. If there be any direction for the public service of the church, with which a clergyman cannot conscientiously comply, he is at liberty to withdraw from her ministry; but not to violate the solemn compact which he has made with her.'

"An honest endeavour to carry out the church's intentions, in every part of public worship, ought not to be stigmatised as popish, or superstitious. If it be singular, it is such a singularity as should be cured, not by one person's desisting from it, but by all taking it up. When I have been asked, whether I approved of certain changes in the mode of celebrating divine service, which were spoken of as novelties, but which were in fact nothing more than a return to the anciently established order of the church, my answer has been, far from questioning the right of the clergy to observe the rubric in every particular, I know it to be their duty; and the only doubt is, how far we are justified in not enforcing such observance in every instance?

"It may, indeed, call for the exercise of a sound discretion, in certain cases, as to the time and mode of bringing about an entire conformity of your practice, in this respect, with the letter of the law; but I cannot, as it appears to me, consistently with my duty, interpose any obstacles, nor offer any objection to its being done. I wish this observation to be understood, as applicable, not only to the administration of public baptism at the time prescribed by the rubric; to the reading of the offertory sentences, and the prayer for the church militant; but to the observance of the days, which the church appoints to be kept holy. I desire more particularly to call your attention to the duty incumbent upon you, of celebrating divine service upon each of the days, on which we commemorate the leading events in the history of our blessed Lord; not only his nativity, crucifixion, and resurrection; but his circumcision, his manifestation to the gentiles, and his glorious ascension. It is my wish, that in obedience to the church's directions, you should celebrate public worship on all the anniversaries of those events; on every day in Passion week, upon the Mondays and Tuesdays after Easter day and Whitsunday, and upon Ash

Wednesday. By specifying these particular days I do not mean to insinuate, that the other festivals and the fasts of our church are not also to be duly kept; but if any distinction is made, those observances, which are appointed in honour of our blessed Lord himself, and the solemn commencement of our great penitential fast, are entitled to peculiar respect. The reason which is commonly assigned for the non-observance of some of these holy days, namely, that the people will not go to church even if we celebrate divine service, I consider not to be of such weight as to preponderate against the plain requirements of the law. The people's neglect in this particular, which began in an age when the church's discipline was sadly relaxed, was perhaps suffered to grow into a confirmed and almost universal habit, by the too great easiness of the clergy in giving way to it; in not pressing upon their hearers the duty of frequently attending church, and giving them opportunities of doing so. It must needs take some time to overcome that habit; but the clergy must be the first to attempt it, and they are not to be blamed for making the attempt. Let them do their part in carrying out the church's intentions, and then none of the laity will have cause to complain of being deprived, by their means, of any one of the opportunities and privileges to which all her children are entitled. 'The life and welfare,' (says Dr. Thomas Jackson,) 'as well of church as of common weal, depend, next under God, on the frequent and fervent prayer of the church; and to neglect such laws and canons, though made by men, as enjoin us to the frequent and decent performance of such duties, is to transgress all those branches of God's law, which command us to seek the peace and welfare of the church and commonweal, wherein the safety of the king and state under whom we live, and (which is above all) the advancement of God's glory, is concerned.'

"With respect to daily service, the rubric directs, that 'the curate or minister in every parish church or chapel, being at home, and not being otherwise reasonably hindered, shall say morning and evening prayer in the parish church or chapel where he ministers.' Of the reasonableness of the hindrance, which may excuse a clergyman from the daily celebration of divine service, he must himself be the judge, subject always to the authority of the bishop, in case he shall see fit to interpose it, and to require such celebration. In many cases it may be difficult for one clergyman to perform all the services appointed by the church; and that the framers of the rubric did not intend to insist upon an uninterrupted daily performance of divine service, appears, I think, from the direction given to the curate, that when it is performed, he shall cause a bell to be tolled a convenient time before, to give the people notice. But it is quite clear, that any clergyman who thinks fit to comply with the rubric in this respect, and has daily prayers in his church, is justified, and more than justified, in doing so. 'As we are not excused by,' says Dean Comber, 'so we ought not to be discouraged at, people's slowness in coming to daily prayers; for their presence is indeed a comfort to us, and an advantage to themselves: but their absence does not hinder the success, nor should it obstruct the performance of our prayers.'—'Let our congregation be great or small, it is our duty to read these prayers daily.'

"In my primary charge to the clergy of this diocese, in speaking of masses, I expressed a wish that the experiment should be tried, not on Wednesdays or Fridays only, on which days the litany might still be used at eleven o'clock, but on every day except Sunday, agreeably to the practice of the early church and of our own in its better age. In expressing that wish, I had in view the parish churches in towns; and where it has been carried into effect, I believe that a considerable number of persons have been found to profit by the opportunities so afforded. I know of no reason why the same practice should not be resorted to in country parishes, where the resident clergyman or deacon is desirous of giving full effect to the church's intentions; although the employment and habits of our rural population may prevent it, for a time at least, from producing much effect. The truth is, reverend brethren, that until the church's intentions are completely fulfilled, as to her ritual, we do not know what the church really is, nor what she is capable of effecting. It is the instrument by which she seeks to realise and apply her doctrines; and the integrity and purity of the one may, as to their effect, be more and hindered, in what degree we know not, by a defective observance of the other.

"I would urge this consideration upon you, with an especial reference to the more frequent celebration of the holy communion, the most appropriate and distinguishing act of Christian worship. I am persuaded that much of the backwardness and unwillingness to communicate, which the clergy have so much cause to lament in country parishes, has arisen from the practice of having only quarterly communions. The people are brought to consider the Lord's supper, not only as the most solemn office of devotion, but as something so mysterious and awful, that the church can venture to celebrate it only upon rare occasions; and they are naturally led to question their own fitness to receive it. They are reminded of the duty only once in three months; and while they are doubting, and perhaps all but resolved to communicate, the opportunity passes away, and they think no more of it for another quarter of a year. A more frequent exhibition of these holy mysteries, with proper instruction on the part of the clergy, would keep the duty of communicating more constantly before the eyes of the people: the disobedience and neglect, which they practise once a quarter, they will be less likely to practise every month, or every week; and I believe that in few instances have the clergy multiplied the opportunities of parochial communion, without increasing the number of communicants."

"As to those forms and ceremonies which are expressly enjoined in the rubric or canons, and which, as is said in the 12th

Canon, are intended to 'testify the people's humility, christian resolution, and due acknowledgment that the Lord Jesus Christ, the true eternal Son of God, is the; only Saviour of the world,' I think that upon the principle asserted by Bishop Butler they are clearly reasonable, and that, being enjoined by the church, they are obligatory upon its members. Such are the various devotional postures prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer, and the doing lowly reverence when in time of divine service the Lord Jesus is mentioned, as directed by the same canon; which custom, says Hooker, 'sheweth a reverent regard to the Son of God, above other messengers, though speaking as from God also; and against infidels, jews, and arians, who derogate from the person of Jesus Christ, such ceremonies are most profitable.'

"Again, although I do not consider the Canons of 1640 to be binding upon the clergy, I see no very serious objection to the custom therein commended, as having been the ancient custom of the primitive church, and of this also for many years in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, of doing obeisance on entering and leaving churches and chancels; not, as the canon expressly declares, 'with any intention to exhibit any religious worship to the communion-table, the east, or church, or any thing therein contained, in so doing, or to perform the said gesture in the celebration of the holy eucharist from any opinion of the corporal presence of the body of Christ upon the holy table, or in the mystical elements, but only for the advancement of God's glory, to give Him alone that honour and glory which are due unto Him, and no otherwise.'

"But that the clergy, although they are at liberty to use this custom, are not obliged to do so, even if that canon be in force, is clear from the words of the canon itself, which heartily commends, but does not enjoin it. 'In the practice or omission of this rite,' (it says,) 'we desire that the rule of charity prescribed by the apostle may be observed, which is, that they who use this rite despise not them who use it not, and that they who use it not condemn not those that use it.' If those persons, who practise these obeisances towards the holy table, do so under the notion of a bodily presence of Christ in the consecrated elements, or if the people are led to suppose them to do so, then I consider the custom to be objectionable, and at variance with the spirit of our reformed church. If otherwise, the clergy, who observe it, are bound to explain it to the people, in the sense in which it is explained by the canon.

"The same Canons of 1640, declare, that the situation of the holy table at the east end of the church, being in its own nature indifferent, and that wherein no religion is to be placed, or scruple made thereon, 'doth not imply that it is, or ought to be accounted, a true and proper altar, whereon Christ is again really sacrificed; but it is, and may be called an altar, in that sense in which the primitive church called it an altar, and in no other.' Those persons who hold not simply a real, but a bodily presence of Christ in the consecrated elements, can scarcely avoid holding also the notion of a propitiatory sacrifice; and to this notion of a bodily presence is to be traced a superstitious reverence for the external circumstances of the Eucharist. Our own church, admitting the doctrine of a real, though spiritual presence, utterly rejects that of a corporal presence, which, however it may be veiled under obscure and unintelligible terms, is virtually one with the error of transubstantiation. It is expressly declared at the end of the Communion Service, that by the custom of kneeling to receive the elements, 'no adoration is intended, or ought to be done, either unto the sacramental bread or wine then bodily received, or unto any corporal presence of Christ's natural flesh and blood.'

"The ceremonies,' says Bishop Fleetwood, [Works, 723.] 'allowed in practice in the church, though not enjoined by the rubric, are such as were used in the church before and when the rubrics were made; and being reasonable, and easy, and becoming, were not enforced by any new law, but were left in possession of what force they had obtained by custom. He that complies not with these ceremonies, offends against no law, but only against custom; which yet a prudent man will not lightly do, when once it has obtained in general.'

"With regard to worshipping towards the east, there can be no doubt of its having been a very ancient practice of the church; for it is mentioned by Clement of Alexandria, and by Tertullian. Bishop Stillingfleet, one of the most learned of our divines, considers it to be one of those customs derived from primitive times, and continuing to our own, which there is no reason to oppose, but rather to comply with. 'And of all customs,' he observes, 'that of contention and singularity, where there is no plain reason against them, doth the least become the church of God.'

"I do not, however, consider it to be the intention of our church, that the officiating minister, when reading prayers, should turn to the east with his back to the congregation. Bishop Sparrow thinks, that anciently the reading-desk was so placed, that the minister looked to the east, away from the people, to whom he is directed to turn in reading the lessons. But the reading-desk was not known in the early years of the Reformation. It is not mentioned in the Injunctions of King Edward the Sixth, nor in those of Queen Elizabeth, nor in any canons or visitation articles before the canon of 1603. The first rubric in King Edward's Common Prayer-Book, orders, that the minister so turn him in reading prayers as that the people may best hear him; and as the customary place for reading the prayers was then the chancel, at the communion-table, it is clear that he could not have faced the east. [Hamon L'Estrange, Alliance, 328.] It appears, however, from the proceedings of the Savoy Conference, that it was customary at that time for the minister to turn to the people only when he spoke to them, as in the lessons, absolution, and benedictions:

'when he speaks for them to God,' it was argued by the bishops, 'it is fit that they should all turn another way, as the ancient church ever did, the reasons of which you may see in August. lib. 2, de Ser. Dom. in Monte.' [Dr. Cardwell's History of Conferences, 353.]

"I myself approve of, as convenient, though not necessary, the arrangement lately adopted in several churches, where the reading desk is near the east end of the church; by which the clergyman looks towards the south while reading prayers, and towards the west while reading the lessons.

"With respect to those ornaments of the church, about which there is a difference of opinion, where the rubric and canons are not clear, the judgment of the bishop should be sought for. A question has arisen about placing lights upon the communion-table. Some doubt may be entertained as to the law in this particular. They were forbidden by the Injunctions of King Edward the Sixth, in 1549; but they were in use when the first Liturgy of that monarch received the authority of parliament, and therefore seem to be sanctioned by the rubric in our present Common Prayer-Book. But whether it be so or not, they have always been retained in the chapels royal, in cathedrals, and in college chapels; and I see no objection to them, provided that the candles are not burning except when the church is lighted up for evening service.

"I strongly disapprove of the practice, which, as I am informed, has been adopted by a few of the clergy, of decorating the communion-table with flowers; and especially when that decoration is varied from day to day, so as to have some fanciful analogy to the history of the saint who is commemorated. This appears to me to be something worse than frivolous, and to approach very nearly to the honours paid by the church of Rome to deified sinners. Such practices as these, which are neither prescribed, nor recommended, nor even noticed by our church, nor sanctioned by general custom, throw discredit upon those decent ceremonies, and expressive forms, which are intended to enliven the devotion of those who are engaged in the service of God, and to do honour to his holy name. It is well observed by Bishop Halifax, that 'there may be too much of form in religion, as well as too little. The one leads to enthusiasm, the other degenerates into superstition; the one is puritanism, the other is popery; whereas the rational worship of God, is equally removed from either extreme.'

"In resisting an exaggerated spiritualism, we must be careful not to incur the charge of materializing religion; and above all, we must beware of arbitrarily connecting the gifts of God with ordinances of merely human appointment, and of teaching our people to place the ceremonies which the church has ordained, however significant and laudable, on the same footing as the Sacraments which have been ordained by the Lord Jesus Himself. It is very well to speak of them as precious fragments of an ancient, or perhaps a primitive ritual; but we deny that they are to be cherished as anything more than decent and venerable usages; or that we have the slightest evidence of their being divinely authorized portions of the church's perpetual spiritual sacrifice.

"Ordinances and ceremonies, which cannot be shown to have been instituted by the apostles, with a direction for their continuance, are not of perpetual obligation upon the whole church; as, for example, the appointment of an order of deaconesses, or widows; the anointing of the sick with oil; and some other instances; although if we can prove them to have been used by the apostles, or make it appear highly probable that they were so, they may not be lightly laid aside, nor changed, even by churches, and not at all by individual members of a church. This is the doctrine of our own church, in the preface to her Book of Common Prayer; and in this respect every one, at least every clergyman, is bound by the laws of his own church. What they enjoy he is a practice; what they forbid he is to abstain from; what they purposely omit he is not to introduce.

"Prayers for the dead, trine immersion in baptism, the kiss of peace in the Eucharist, the mixing of water with wine in the chalice—all these were undoubtedly ancient customs, if not all of primitive antiquity; but they are not recognised by our own church, and they are, therefore, not to be practised by its ministers. 'Let no minister of a parish,' says Bishop Jeremy Taylor, 'introduce any ceremonies, rites, or gestures, that with some seeming piety or devotion, which are not commanded by the church and established by law; and let those also be even and usefully explicated to the people, that they may understand the reasons of observance; but let there be no more introduced lest the people be burdened unnecessarily and tempted, or divided.' [Instructions to the Clergy of Down and Connor.]

"You are not to take as your rule and model in this respect the early church, or the primitive church; but the church of England, as she speaks in plain and obvious cases by her rubric and canons, in doubtful and undecided ones by her bishops. This is the language of common sense, as it is of the canon law, laid down by its able interpreter Van Espen: 'Singularium consuetudinum ritus atque ceremonie, ut vestimenta, servanda sunt; neque presbyterus sine ecclesie ministerio, ritum præscriptum immutare licet, eo citius prestat, quo contrarius ritus pristinae ecclesie dum conformior esset, videreturque ad erigendam populi devotionem, necnon ad servanda mysteria, optior et convenientior' [P. II, sect. 1, tit. 5, c. 1, § 24.] I earnestly wish that this rule were kept in view by all clergymen. We should not then be to complain of unwarrantable emendations or alterations of the church's service on the one hand, nor of unauthorized additions to the ritual on the other. I confess that I see the former fault with less complacency than the latter. I think that a clergyman who presumes to omit any part of the service which he has solemnly pledged himself to use whole and entire, either through haste, or negligence, or, which is still worse, from a dislike of the doctrine which they assert, offends more grievously against the order of the church than he who, from a mistaken zeal for antiquity, revives obsolete practices, or is minutely scrupulous in his attention to the externals of religion. It is my earnest wish that you should omit no part of the solemn services which the church has appointed to be used, whether in the administration of the sacraments, or in what are commonly termed the occasional offices.

“With respect to the habits proper to be worn by the clergy, when ministering in divine service, no question is made, as far as the prayers are concerned; but it is doubted, whether a clergyman, when preaching, should wear a surplice or a gown. I apprehend, that for some time after the Reformation, when sermons were preached only in the morning as part of the communion service, the preacher always wore a surplice [or possibly an albe, or close-sleeved surplice], a custom which has been retained in cathedral churches, and college chapels. The injunction at the end of King Edward’s first Service Book requires the surplice to be used in all churches and chapels in the saying or singing of matins, and evensong, baptizing, and burying. And the present rubric enacts, that all the ornaments of ministers, at all times of their ministration, be the same as they were by authority of parliament in the second year of King Edward the Sixth. The gown was probably first worn in the pulpit by the licensed preachers, and by the lecturers, who preached when no part of the communion service was read. In the king’s Injunctions of 1533, to the archbishop, a direction is given, that ‘where a lecture is set up in a market town, it may be read by a company of grave and orthodox divines, and that they ever preach in such seemly habits as belong to their degrees, and not in cloaks.’ When there is only one officiating clergyman, and the prayer for the church militant is read, which must be read in a surplice, it seems better that he should preach in the surplice, than quit the church after the sermon, for the purpose of changing his habit. It would perhaps be most consonant with the intention of the church, if the preacher wore a surplice when preaching after the morning service, and a gown when the sermon is in the evening. Upon the whole, I am hardly prepared to give any positive direction on this point for this particular diocese, although it is certainly desirable that uniformity of practice should prevail in the church at large.

“A more important point than that of the dress of the officiating clergyman, is the manner in which he reads the common prayer. No person objects more strongly than I do to a declamatory, or dramatic mode of reading; but I do not understand why those clergymen, who seek to avoid that fault, should pass to the opposite extreme of rapid and monotonous recitation, which they describe as reading piano cantu. I am aware, that in the old rubric even the lessons were directed to be sung in plain tune, as also the epistle and gospel. But this was wisely altered. There are certain parts of the service which the rubric still directs to be said or sung; with reference probably to ‘choirs, and places where they sing,’ as the rubric expresses it, and to parish churches and chapels, where the prayers are said, and not sung. But whether said or sung, it should be devoutly, audibly, and distinctly. The 14th Canon directs, that the common prayer ‘be said or sung distinctly and reverently.’ Queen Elizabeth’s injunction of 1559, was, ‘that all readers of public prayers be charged to read leisurely, plainly, and distinctly.’ The writer of the Homily on Common Prayer cites a Constitution of Justinian to the same effect: the rule laid down in the Reformatio Legum is, ‘partite voces et distincte pronuntient, et cantus sit illorum clarus et aptus, ut ad auditorum sensum et intelligentiam perveniant.’ The reason why so great a stress was laid on the distinct reading of the church service, independently of its obvious necessity, was the general prevalence of an opposite practice amongst the popish clergy, many of whom, after they had conformed to the Liturgy, read it as they had been accustomed to read the prayers in their Breviary.

“It is much to be regretted, that any of the clergy of our reformed church, which justly glories in a form of public prayer, so framed that the people may both understand it, and bear a part in it, should think it necessary, or profitable, or consistent with the church’s intentions, to read it in a hurried and indistinct manner. ‘It is an absurdity and an iniquity,’ says Bishop Gibson, ‘which we justly charge upon the church of Rome, that her public service is in a tongue unknown to the people: but though our service is in a known tongue, it must be owned, that as reading it, without being heard, makes it, to all intents and purposes, an unknown tongue, so confused and indistinct reading, with every degree thereof, is a gradual approach to it.’

“It is a subject, my brethren, of still deeper concern, that any of our body, though but few, should evince a desire and longing to revert, not merely to some of the outward ceremonies, but to the devotional formularies of the church of Rome; that they should speak disparagingly and disrespectfully of our Liturgy, and prepare men of ardent feelings, and warm imaginations, for a return to the Roman mass book, by publishing, for daily use, devotions and homilies, taken from authors of that church, and embodying not a few of its superstitions and unscriptural doctrines and practices: that they should recommend, or justify, under any qualification, prayers or addresses to saints, a practice which began in poetry, and ended in idolatry; intercessions for the dead, which our church, by her formal discontinuance of them, has implicitly forbidden, and which tend directly to the notion of purgatory; and auricular confession, a practice utterly unknown to the primitive church, one of the most fearful abuses of that of Rome, and the source of unspeakable abominations.

VICT. c. 86.

"It is a subject of concern, that while they protest in cautious and measured terms against some of the errors of that church, they should abstain from the plain, uncompromising assertion of her unscriptural, or rather her anti-scriptural character; and spend their lamentations on their own national church, as sitting apart from the mother of churches, and in bondage to the powers of this world, rather than upon that system of corruption and tyranny, which drove her from communion with Rome, and which is still maintained by Rome in theory, and, as far as circumstances will permit, in practice also.

"Again, it is matter of shame and grief to us, and of exultation to our adversaries, that while such men as Hildebrand and Becket are held up to admiration, men who, if they were sincere, were yet the authors and abettors of evil, the firebrands of discord, and the subverters of civil government, reproach and censure should be cast upon those holy fathers, to whom, under God, we owe our deliverance from an intolerable yoke, Cranmer, and Ridley, and Jewel; as though the occasional errors into which they may have fallen, under circumstances of difficulty which we are wholly unable to appreciate, were not a thousand times outweighed by their services to the cause of God's truth and of his church."

"I think that it is not correct to commence divine service with a psalm or hymn.

"The psalms and services had better be said than sung, where the congregation are not sufficiently versed in the knowledge of music to take part in them.

"Where a saint's day falls upon a Sunday, the collect for the saint's day, as well as that for the Sunday, should be read, and the epistle and gospel for the saint's day, but the lessons for the Sunday.

"The minister should himself give out the psalms to be sung, and all notices that may be lawfully published in church.

"The prayers for the ember weeks should always be used as appointed.

"The responses in the communion service should be said, rather than sung, where there is not cathedral service.

"After the Nicene creed, the minister should in all cases declare, what holy days or fasting days are in the week following appointed to be observed.

"Baptism is never to be administered in private houses, except in cases of urgent necessity; and all such baptisms should be duly registered within the time prescribed by law. This I request you to take as my authoritative direction, as well as what follows.

"That you will not permit any clergyman to officiate as your temporary substitute, or assistant, not being a personal friend or acquaintance of your own, who shall not have first exhibited to me his letters of orders and testimonials; and that no clergyman, serving only one church, omit either morning or evening service on Sundays."

Judgment of the Bishop of Exeter in re Walter Blunt (Clerk).

On the 12th September, 1844, Mr. Hall, one of the churchwardens of Helston, in a letter to the Lord Bishop of Exeter, made complaints against the Rev. Walter Blunt, the curate of Helston, as follows:

"First. Comes the use of the surplice in the pulpit: this, however, excited little attention; probably it would have scarcely been noticed had he not at first preached in the gown.

"Secondly. A great deal of dissimulation was excited by the substitution of an extemporary dissertation on the Liturgy for a sermon; a sort of lectures interesting probably to the church antiquarian, but very unsatisfactory to a man anxious to learn his duty to God and man.

"Thirdly. The disease of any prayer before or after the sermon.

"Fourthly. The substitution of an extempore lecture on one of the lessons for a sermon in the evening; this being introduced after the second lesson, and neither preceded nor ended by prayer: the lecture itself being more frequently historical than of any practical tendency.

"Fifthly. The compelling all persons to remain in church on sacrament Sundays until the conclusion of the exhortation, on pain of excommunication, ipse facto; a custom, as Mr. Blunt allows, peculiar to this church.

"Sixthly. The refusal to read the Lord's Prayer with, or to administer the holy communion to, a man who had been baptized by a Roman catholic priest, the man having previously communicated in our church, and being unwilling that the sacrament of baptism should be repeated.

"Seventhly. The refusal to bury the corpse of a young man who had been baptized by a dissenting minister in a colony where no church minister was to be found.

"Eighthly. The refusal to marry persons unless they could prove satisfactorily that they had been baptized."

In consequence of these complaints, a commission was issued by the Bishop of Exeter, on the 4th of October, 1844, for the purpose of inquiring into and reporting concerning them.

An additional paper, entitled "Cause of complaint," was exhibited before the commissioners on the part of certain members of the church of Helston against their reverend curate, as follows:

"1. For having, shortly after he entered on the curacy, refused to administer the sacrament of the Lord's supper to John Blake, then supposed to be in a dying state, and having told the said John Blake that he could not bury him, unless he consented to be baptized.

"The following are briefly the facts of the case: John Blake, an Irishman by birth, was baptized by a Roman catholic priest, and afterwards confirmed by a catholic bishop; he was for ten years in the army, and during the last fourteen has resided at Helston, in the service of the Rev. Thomas Stabbeak; he was married in the West Indies according to the rite of the English protestant church, and for the last twenty-four years he had been a regular attendant at the services of that church. Blake has always been remarkable for great propriety of conduct; his children were baptized in the church, and have been for some years at the national schools, where they have been distinguished for their good conduct. Supposing himself to be dying, Blake expressed a wish to see the clergyman, and to receive the sacrament; and Mr. Blunt was requested to administer it, but on discovering that Blake had been baptized by a catholic priest, he not only refused to do so, but declared that he could not use the Lord's Prayer in praying with him, as the words 'Our Father' could not be considered to apply to them jointly. On Blake's expressing a hope to Mr. Blunt that he would bury him, he declared he could not do so unless he was baptized. The poor man, however, not being satisfied of the necessity or even propriety of a repetition of the sacrament, declined Mr. Blunt's offer to administer it.

"These facts will be fully borne out by Blake, who still lives, and also by his wife.

"On Mr. Blunt's being asked upon what principle he had acted in this case, and if our church had not recognised baptism by Roman catholic priests? he replied that the Irish was not a true branch of the Romish church, that the Irish catholics were schismatics from our church, and therefore their services were entitled to no consideration.

"2. For adopting the use of the surplice in the pulpit, and dispensing with prayer both before and after the sermon, and frequently addressing the congregation from the pulpit before the sermon in a vehement and unbecoming manner, respecting the changes he had made and proposed to make in the mode of performing the services of the church.

"3. For having in the month of April last, published for the first time the banns of marriage between John Retallack and Elizabeth Ralph, and afterwards refusing to proceed with the publication on the ground that one of the parties had not been baptized.

"These parties were married in the register-office at Helston, on the 24th of May, and on the superintendent-registrar remonstrating with Mr. Blunt on the impolicy (to use the mildest term) of thus driving people from the church, and asking his reason for refusing to proceed with the banns, Mr. Blunt stated that the marriage service contemplated that parties married should receive the sacrament, and exhorted them to do so as soon as conveniently might be; that a person not baptized was not qualified to receive the sacrament, and therefore not in a condition to be married. On being asked what persons born and bred dissenters were to do, Mr. Blunt said they had the Marriage Act. To the question, what course was open to them before that act passed? he replied that it ought to have been passed long before. This case excited, as might be supposed, a great sensation, and only one marriage took place in Helston church during the three months of April, May, and June, instead of the average number of ten or twelve.

"4. For compelling women coming to be churched to submit to the exposure and fatigue of kneeling at the rails of the communion table, where he reads the service, instead of permitting them to remain in the seat appropriate for the purpose, and performing the service in the desk in the ordinary manner.

"5. For dismissing the church singers, and substituting in their stead some of the national school boys, wholly ignorant of music, and who, being placed in the chancel, at the greatest possible distance from the organ, are quite beyond all control of the organist, whereby the solemn and devotional effect of this part of the service is entirely destroyed.

"6. For refusing to bury any person not baptized by a minister of the established church, in open defiance of the settled law of the land.

"7. For tendering to the churchwardens for their signature, conjointly with his own, a notice to be published to the effect that no dissenter should be buried in the churchyard before the hour of eight in the evening, which the churchwardens refused to sign.

"8. For requiring the whole of the congregation to remain in church on Sundays when the sacrament of the Lord's supper is administered during the offertory and collection of alms, and until after the reading of the exhortation.

"9. For having on Sunday, the 1st of September instant, after the conclusion of the sermon, addressed the congregation in a violent and intemperate manner, declaring his determination not to allow any persons who left the church on sacrament Sundays before the exhortation to partake of the holy communion again; and that persons so offending should not only be prevented from communicating in that church, but that he would take care they should be admitted to no other, and that he would write to every clergyman in the neighbourhood, enjoining them not to admit such persons to the sacrament in their churches."

Report of the Commissioners.

"October 10, 1844.

"My lord,—We, the commissioners appointed by your lordship to inquire into the circumstances connected with the present state of the church in Helston, beg leave to represent that we held a meeting on the 4th of October, in the national school-room of that town, endeavouring as far as possible to keep in view the instructions given us by your lordship as to the mode of procedure. In the accompanying paper, marked A, headed 'Notes, &c.' will be found a full and almost verbatim report of the evidence produced, together with Mr. Blunt's own explanations. Having sat for six hours on that day, and listened patiently to every statement that was offered, in consequence of the evidently exhausted and excited state of Mr. Blunt, and also of strong indications of impatience as well as acrimonious feeling displayed by other parties, we deemed it requisite to adjourn to the 10th inst., rather than allow Mr. Blunt to place himself in so unfavourable a position as he must have done by proceeding at such a time and place with his observations. It was therefore arranged, with the entire concurrence of Messrs. Hill and Blunt, that Mr. Blunt should, in the interval, be allowed to furnish us with such further observations or explanations as evading as he might deem advisable. We beg to forward Mr. Blunt's supplementary statements, which we have perused. It would be satisfactory were it in our power to report favourably of the tone and temper of either party concerned in the investigation. We regret, however, to state, that Mr. Hill seemed to us to have come to the meeting, and to have conducted his case throughout with feelings of considerable personal irritation. This might have been caused, we think, in some measure, by Mr. Blunt having at the outset of our proceedings refused to recognise Mr. Hill as a legal churchwarden, and by his having forwarded to him a ticket of admission to the investigation sought for by Mr. Hill himself. Throughout the day, Mr. Blunt appeared to labour under strong excitement, not perhaps, however, greater than might have been expected under the trying circumstances in which he was placed. Before we make any observations on the evidence, it may be necessary for us to observe, in consequence of an observation of Mr. Blunt's (vide sheet 3), that in no instance did we interfere so as to prevent Mr. Blunt from pursuing any line of examination that he might have thought requisite, consistently with the usual course of taking evidence; and that as to Mr. Blunt's feeling the investigation to be a degradation to himself, we trust that your lordship will see that we have only endeavoured to carry out the instructions of our commission.

"We proceed, then, with the charges in the order in which they appear in Mr. Hill's letter to your lordship, which charges were at our meeting, on the 4th, adopted by both churchwardens.

"1. Use of the surplice in the pulpit. This appears to be fully admitted by Mr. Blunt.

"2. Mr. Blunt admits that he has preached frequently from notes.

"3. The disuse of the prayer before or after sermon is also admitted by Mr. Blunt, and also the fact of his giving a lecture after the second lesson of the evening service.
